The abolition of assizes is a mere matter of time. There are those who, with the LORD CHIEF BARON, may consider Surrey a "great and important" county, to which assizes are a necessity of existence, but the practical inconvenience of such assizes as have been held this year at Kingston is too great to allow of their continuance. And it has been very properly pointed out in connection with the Winter Assize Act, that if assizes can be dispensed with in the home counties, they can also be dispensed with in all counties within the radius of the farthest town in the farthest home county. The Bar and the solicitors suffer seriously by present arrangements. None but members of the South-Eastern circuit go to Kingston, but assizes have been going on at Huntingdon and Cambridge and Kingston contemporaneously. The Bar is therefore split, and at one town or the other suitors are placed in a difficulty. And there is no conceivable reason why civil causes belonging to Surrey should not be tried at Westminster. It is certainly remarkable that none of the legal gentlemen in the House of Commons think it necessary to bring before the House the glaring anomalies at present existing in our judicial system, together with the monstrous abuses prevailing at Judges' Chambers.

The new arrangements introduced by the Order in Council which was framed upon the Act passed in the last session of Parliament for centralising the trial of prisoners at winter assizes, do not appear to have given universal satisfaction. At the recent assizes held at Chelmsford the grand jury made a presentment to the effect that the Order in Council removing the Essex prisoners for trial at those assizes to the Central Criminal Court, was impolitic, and acted very injuriously to the prisoners, since they were both unable to procure the attendance of their witnesses and deprived of the means of properly defending themselves. If such were in truth the consequences that resulted from the operation of the Order in Council, a serious question might be raised, whether the ill effects of the new arrangements did not, at least in some circuits, more than counterbalance the benefits. Lord Justice BRAMWELL, to whom the presentment was made, stated that all he could say was that the presentment should be forwarded to the HOME SECRETARY, but at the same time he considered it right to observe that at present it was almost, if not quite, as convenient for the witnesses in the Essex cases to go to London as to come to Chelmsford. It is a satisfaction to the supporters of the new arrangement in its integrity to know that his Lordship did not see any objection to the cases at the winter circuit being sent to the Central Criminal Court, although he thought that it would probably be better if some arrangement could be made whereby all the Essex cases could be tried on a particular day. Such an arrangement is certainly very feasible, and if carried out would perhaps meet the objections urged in the presentment to which we have referred.

The practical importance of the decision of the House of Lords in Clark (resp.) v. Adie (app.)—a case determined on the 1st instant—is that it brings out strongly the relation existing between the licence of a patent, and the patentee, where questions of the validity of the patent are involved. The appellant was the patentee of a horse clipping machine; the respondent was a maker of the same kind of machines, to whom the appellant had agreed to grant a licence to manufacture machines under his patent, the respondent agreeing to pay a certain royalty upon each machine sold by him. Disputes having arisen between the parties, the appellant filed a bill for performance by the respondent of the agreement in question. Vice-Chancellor BACON granted the prayer of the bill, and an account was directed. A licence was executed under the decree, but on taking the accounts the respondent denied that he had ever made any machines under the licence, and contended that all those he had at any time made, as well as those he was engaged in making, were not within the limits of the patent, and, in fact, were not affected by the terms of the decree. The appellant thereupon took out a summons to surcharge the respondent on account of the horse clippers, which he alleged were made according to his invention. The appellant, on the other hand, produced certain documents in evidence which had been deposited in the Patent Office, consisting of American

The Law and the Lawyers.

THE taking of silk by juniors generally causes some inconvenience to clients, and we fear it is unavoidable that other juniors should be instructed to replace them when this occurs. Such is now the established practice; but we observe that it was stated during a recent discussion before Vice-Chancellor HALL that "no leading counsel on circuit would accept a brief without a junior." Unfortunately this is not the case; it is not an utterly unknown patents, as well as of some prior specification of English patents. The appellant objected to this evidence on the ground that it was inadmissible; the VICE-CHANCELLOR overruled the objection and dismissed the summons. The Court of Appeal, however, reversed the VICE-CHANCELLOR's decision, and held that on the principle that a licensee could not in any way dispute the validity of the patent, the evidence was inadmissible. The most usual way of stating the principle here involved is by saying that a licensee is estopped from disputing the title of his licensor. This is no new principle in our law. In Doe d. Johnson v. Baytop (3 A. & E. 188), the defendant asked leave of the person in possession to get vegetables in the garden, and having thus obtained an entrance, took possession of the house, claiming a title. The court held that the defendant was estopped from setting up such a claim. "In the case," said Mr. Justice PATTERSON, "of a person who has become tenant, there is no doubt as to the law. Doe d. Knight v. Lady Smythe, shows that he must give up possession to the party by whom he was let in, and then, if he, or anyone claiming under him, has a title aliunde, that title may be tried by ejectment. . . . The rule as to claiming title, which applies to the case of a tenant, extends also to that of a person coming in by permission, as a mere lodger or as a servant." So it has been held that if the patentee, in consideration of a royalty grants to another a licence to use the patent and the latter uses it, he cannot set up in answer to an action for the royalty that the invention was not new, or that the patentee was not the first inventor: (Morton v. Brooks, 7 H. & N. 499; Crosseley v. Dixon, 10 H. of L. C. 293.) It is rather superfluous at this stage in the history of the branch of law in question to seek a reason for the existence of such a rule, nor indeed is it necessary to do so. Its expediency appears to the most casual glance.

A SOMEWHAT curious illustration of the law of innkeepers' lien was afforded a few days ago in the case of Powell v. Owen, which was heard before the divisional court for hearing motions from the three common law divisions. Baron HUNDLSTON had made an order in chambers ordering the sale of three horses on which the defendants claimed a lien under the following circumstances: The plaintiff remained for some time at an hotel kept by a widow, and stabled his horses there. Upon the widow's death the defendants, her legal representatives, brought an action against the plaintiff for the amount of £30 14s. 3d., a debt alleged to have been incurred by him during his stay at her house. He replied that he was engaged to be married to the landlady, and was not a guest at the hotel, but was assisting her in its management. The defendants seized the horses in question, whereupon the plaintiff brought detinue for their recovery. Baron HUNDLSTON ordered them to be sold, as the plaintiff refused to accept them subject to the condition that he should bring the money into court to abide the result of the trial. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that Order LII., rule 2, was intended to preserve the subject matter of litigation for the successful party in the action, and although, under that rule, a Judge might order a party to pay the money claimed into court, and then have his property back, it was not compulsory on the party to pay into court. The rule in question enacts in terms that it shall be lawful for a Judge, on the application of any party to any action, to make any order for the sale, by any person named in the order, and in such manner and in such terms as to the Judge may seem desirable, of any goods, wares, or merchandise which may be of a perishable nature, or likely to injure from keeping, or which for any other just reason it may be desirable to have sold at once. After some rather humorous discussion the court came to the conclusion that the rule rescinding the order in question should be made absolute, and that the plaintiff should receive back two of the three horses, apparently on the ground that one of them was of sufficient value to meet the debt alleged to be due from the plaintiff. This result probably meets the merits of the case.

HAVING referred recently in these columns to two cases in which the Court of Appeal had refused to allow the arbitrary power of committing for contempt to be exercised, it may be useful to dwell briefly upon a more recent case, in which the circumstances fully justified such committal. In Re Bennet and Glave, ex parte Close, which case came before the Court of Appeal on the 9th inst., proceedings had been originally begun in the Leeds County Court. The debtor G. carried on business with B. as cloth merchants. He filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement in April 1875. To this the creditors assented, C. being appointed trustee. The trustee alleged that he had reason to suspect that the debtor had concealed and appropriated some bales of cloth which ought to have been sold for the benefit of the creditors, and that he had also received sums of money on the day on which he had filed his petition. The trustee accordingly took out a summons against the debtor in the Leeds County Court, calling upon the latter to answer in open court the charges referred to. The debtor appeared, but, acting upon the advice of his solicitor, refused to answer any questions, on the ground that such an examination. The County Court Judge then made an order of committal for contempt of court, but respite its operation until the question of law might be decided. The CHIEF JUDGE discharged this order, and the Court of Appeal has reversed the latter order in its turn. Lord Justice JAMES pointed out that if the debtor would submit and answer the questions put, perhaps the County Court Judge would not send him to prison. This, however, was a matter in the Judge's discretion, and, as his Lordship observed, "if the County Court Judge was fit to be trusted with anything, he ought to be allowed to use his own judgment as to whether a committal was proper." This, however, must be taken merely as an expression of opinion. Lord Justice MELLISH agreed that the order of the County Court Judge should be upheld, but expressed an opinion that as a general rule the trustee ought to make application to the debtor for information before summoning him. This is sensible advice. In the previous cases the MASTER of the ROLLS had said that the jurisdiction in cases of contempt ought to be exercised only where there is no other remedy, and where the mischief would be irremediable; and again, he said, "it appears to me that the jurisdiction of the court in relation to contempt being arbitrary and unlimited, ought to be most jealously and carefully restricted. It should not be exercised by a Judge without the greatest care in seeing that there are no other means not thus arbitrary, of remedying the evil." These observations indicate in effect that the jurisdiction should not be invoked when other and less arbitrary remedies are at hand.

THE SCHEME OF LORD CAIRNS' BANKRUPTCY BILL.

THE principal feature of this measure is the abolition of liquidation and the revival of deeds of arrangement. Considering the enormous amount of litigation to which deeds under the Act of 1861 gave rise, this must be considered an unfortunate step, more particularly when it is remembered that sect. 28 of the Act of 1869 provides a convenient and simple method of taking estates out of bankruptcy for the purpose of enabling the creditors to wind them up. A debtor may present his own petition. The court, having made a "provisional order" on a petition, creditors are to be called together by the court. Being so called together, the creditors shall appoint a committee of inspection, not exceeding five in number, which committee is to appoint a trustee and receiver. Then the first general meeting may do any of three things: (1) Resolve upon a further investigation; (2) that the bankruptcy proceedings be stayed, and the property of the debtor be administered under a deed of arrangement; (3) that adjudication be made, and that the bankruptcy shall proceed. If a deed of arrangement is resolved upon it must be assented to by a majority in numbers representing three-fourths in value of the creditors of the debtor, and also by the committee of inspection. The court is empowered to confirm such deed or to set it aside if not made in good faith, or if the debtor has been guilty of certain offences specified. The creditors pending the proceedings may be called together in two ways: (1) by the trustee, by direction of the committee of inspection; (2) by the court, which may direct the registrar to preside at such meeting. The remuneration of trustees and receivers is to be by way of per centages, as follows:—

For each and every debt collected 5 per cent. on the first amount of £100, or any less sum; 2½ per cent. on the next amount of £400, or any less sum; 1 per cent. on the next amount of £1500, or any less sum; and ½ per cent. on all further sums.

For property realised 2½ per cent. on the first amount of £500 or any less sum; 1 per cent. on the next amount of £500, or any less sum; and ½ per cent. on all further sums.

On dividend 2 per cent. on the first amount of £1000, or any less sum actually divided; and 1 per cent. on all further sums.

The per centage on mortgaged property to be calculated only on the residue payable to the debtor's estate.

The committee of inspection may also allow, if they think fit, for the examination of the debtor's accounts, £5 where the estate realised does not exceed £100, with an addition of £1 per cent. for every sum realised beyond £100.

When the trustee or receiver sells the debtor's stock by tender he may further be allowed as follows:—Not above £400, £4 per cent.; after to £1000, £3 10s. per cent.; after to £2000, £3 10s. per cent.; after to £5000 £2 per cent.; above £5000 and upwards, £1 15s. per cent.

Expenses to be allowed, such as advertisements and printing, not exceeding £2, or at the discretion of the committee.

The committee of inspection may appoint a solicitor, but where the trustee or receiver is himself a solicitor he may contract to be paid a certain sum by way of per-centage or otherwise, as a remuneration for his services as trustee or receiver, including all professional services.

The provisions with respect to dealings with the property of the debtor are directed, and we think successfully, to getting rid of many of the difficulties which have hitherto arisen. For example, a creditor who has levied execution on the goods and chattels of the debtor, must sell before the filing of a bankruptcy petition if he is to make good his title to the proceeds. The "fraudulent preference" clause omits the proviso at the end of sect. 92 of the present Act.

Clause 128 is directed against the solicitation of proxies to secure the appointment of trustee or receiver. Whenever such solicitation is proved, the court is to have power to disallow remuneration, notwithstanding any resolution of the committee of inspection.

PRINCIPLES OF THE LAW RELATING TO MARINE INSURANCE AND GENERAL AVERAGE.

By F. O. CRUMP, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

THE following paragraphs give the result of the decisions since the publication of the work bearing the above title in 1875. One of the main objects of a Digest or Code is to facilitate the modification of the law, and how easily this can be done where the law is stated in concise paragraphs in logical or alphabetical order will appear by reading what follows, and comparing it with the sections of the work itself:

ABANDONMENT.

[Sect. 23.]

ACCEPTANCE.

If the insurers say and do nothing, the conclusion is that they do not mean to accept the abandonment:

Provincial Insurance Company of Canada v. Leduc, L. Rep. 6 P. C. 224.

[The reference to the American law in this section may be expunged, there being now no difference between it and the English law.]

[Sect. 24.]

There will be a constructive acceptance of the abandonment if the insurers take possession of the ship, repair her, and retain possession for some time without informing the insured that they do so for purposes inconsistent with acceptance:

Idem.

NOTE.—It is hardly credible that in this case of Leduc, reported in 1874-5, a reporter should be found who thought it necessary to embody in his head note the statement of law as if only then established, that "After the acceptance by the insurers of the abandonment of a ship they become liable as for a total loss."

BARRATRY.

[Sect. 139.] WHAT HAS BEEN HELD TO AMOUNT TO BARRATRY.

Knowingly violating the Kidnapping Act 1872 by carrying Polynesian labourers without a licence:

Australian Insurance Company v. Jackson, 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 236.

CARGO.

INSURABLE INTEREST.

Vendee.

The vendee of a "cargo" to be loaded by the vendors has no insurable interest in the cargo until completely loaded, unless it appears by the contract of sale that it was the intention to pass the property in the cargo as loaded.

Anderson v. Morice, L. Rep. 1 App. Ca. 713.

[NOTE.—Pages xli. and xlii. of Addenda referring to this case to be cancelled.]

The insurance being effected by the vendee is only an uncertain indication of an intention to assume risk, and cannot extend the operation of the contract.

Idem.

TOTAL—CONSTRUCTIVE.

Sale.

A sale of a subject matter of insurance not necessitated by the happening of perils insured against, but ordered by a foreign tribunal within whose jurisdiction it has been thrown by such perils, for the purpose of repaying advances made to defray expenses incurred by reason of the captain's breach of duty in not transshipping the subject matter to its destination, does not entitle the assured to abandon:

Meyer v. Ralli, L. Rep. 1 C. P. Div. 358.

Saunders v. Baring, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 419.

RISK.

At and from.

In the absence of custom goods placed in a warehouse are not at risk under a policy "at and from A. to B., per ships and steamers, and thence per ship or ships to C., including the risk of transshipment, or landing and re-shipment, with leave to touch at all ports and places for all purposes."

Australasian Agricultural Company v. Saunders, L. Rep. 10 C. P. 668.

CONCEALMENT AND REPRESENTATION.

[Sect. 218, p. 87.]

Failure by a shipmaster to communicate to his owner the fact of damage having been sustained, which gives rise to an average loss, does not, in the absence of fraud, avoid the policy:

Stribley v. Imperial Marine Insurance Company, L. Rep. 1 Q. B. Div. 507. (Loss of anchor.)

[Sect. 252A.]

ELECTION.

A peril insured against having caused damage to the subject matter, the assured may elect to deal with it for his own benefit, or may abandon to the underwriters. What amounts to an election is a question of fact.

See Stringer v. English and Scottish Marine Insurance Company (L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 676); Saunders v. Baring (34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 419).

[NOTE.—In Roux v. Salvador (3 Bing. N. C. 266) Lord Abinger, in giving judgment, says, "The assured may preclude himself from recovering a total loss, if by any view to his own interest, he voluntarily does, or permits to be done, any act whereby the underwriter may be prejudiced in the recovery of that money. Suppose, for example, that the money received upon the sale should be greater than, or equal to, the sum insured; if the assured allows it to remain in the hands of his agent, or of the party making the sale, and treats it as his own he must take upon himself the consequence of any subsequent loss that may arise of that money, and cannot throw upon the underwriter a peril of that nature" (p. 288)

As to electing to continue the voyage

See Mr. Benjamin's argument in Potter v. Rankin (L. Rep. 6 E. & I. 83).

FREIGHT.

DEFINITIONS.

[Sect. 255.]

Advanced freight.

Alison v. Bristol Marine Insurance Company, L. Rep. 1 App. Ca. 209.

TOTAL LOSS.

Loss of cargo.

A charter-party provided that one-half the freight of a cargo should be paid in cash on signing bills of lading, and the remainder on right delivery of the cargo. Half the cargo was lost, and the residue was delivered without any further payment of freight. The underwriters on freight were held liable to pay a total loss of the half freight.

Alison v. Bristol Marine Insurance Company, L. Rep. 1 App. Ca. 209.

[This reverses the decision noted in the Addenda, p. xliii.]

[Sect. 337.]

MASTER.

Add to the references at the foot of the page (187) The Patria (L. Rep. 3 A. & E. 436).

Authority to sell or hypothecate the vessel.

Extreme (or stringent) necessity means the existence of such circumstances as after sufficient examination of her condition, after every exertion in his power within the means at his disposal, to extricate her from peril, or to raise funds for her repair, leave him no alternative but to sell her as she is.

The Cobequid Marine Insurance Company v. Barteaux, L. Rep. 6 P. C. 319.

If the master come to the conclusion to sell hastily, either without sufficient examination into the state of the ship or without having previously made every exertion in his power with the means at his disposal to extricate her from the peril, he will not be justified in selling, even though the danger at the time appear exceedingly imminent.

Idem.

MUTUAL INSURANCE ASSOCIATION.

[Sect. 350.]

Stipulation.

If the effect of any stipulation is to prevent either party enforcing his right by action in the courts, such stipulation is invalid, and either party may proceed by action, as no such stipulation can deprive the courts of their jurisdiction:

Edwards v. Aberayron Mutual Ship Insurance Society, L. Rep. 1 Q. B. Div. 563; Scott v. Avery, 5 H. of L. Ca. 811.

POLICY.

Statements.

[Sect. 375.]

The policy should state—

(8) The subscription of the underwriter.]

A subscription by managers of a society, "per procuration of the several members," is not a compliance with the Act:

Arthur Average Association, L. Rep. 10 Ch. 542.

[Sect. 388.]

Assignment Clause.

To be effectual an assignment must take place before the interest of the assignor in the subject matter insured has ceased.

The right given by the statute to sue in the assignee's own name only applies in cases where he could have sued in the assignor's name:

North of England Oil Cake Company v. Archangel Insurance Company, L. Rep. 10 Q. B. 249.

REINSURANCE.

[Sect. 401.]

How effected.

An underwriter of a policy "on goods" may reinsure by the same description, and the policy need not be expressed to be a reinsurance:

Mackenzie v. Whitworth, L. Rep. 1 Ex. Div. 36.

SUING AND LABOURING.

[NOTE.—Meyer v. Ralli (L. Rep. 1 C. P. Div. 358) proceeds upon the lines laid down in the cases cited at the top of page 294, and here we have another reporting curiosity, the Common Pleas reporter having set out in the headnote the effect of those decisions which the judges simply applied in Meyer v. Ralli.]

WARRANTIES.

[Sect. 494.]

SEAWORTHINESS.

Semble, where a policy is for a voyage limited to a particular time there is an implied warranty of seaworthiness.

Per Lord Coleridge, C. J., in Dudgeon v. Pembroke, L. Rep. 1 Q. B. Div. 96.

[The judges differed so remarkably in this case that it is of very little value as an authority.]

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST PROMOTERS OF PUBLIC COMPANIES.

THE decision of the Common Pleas Division in Twycross v. Grant is destined to be the source of a fearful amount of litigation. We have received the following communication and accompanying papers:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Twycross v. Grant.

SIR,—I quite agree with the view taken by your correspondent, "A Solicitor of Twenty Years' Standing," in your number of the 3rd instant, as to the grave position in which many of my professional brethren stand if through the non-insertion in prospectuses of certain contracts, which for the last ten years have been considered by both the Bar and solicitors, with few exceptions, as not required to be set out, our clients have incurred pecuniary penalties of ruinous amounts, which they may attribute to having acted under legal advice.

With every respect for Lord Coleridge and his decision in the Lisbon Tramways case I think his conclusions totally wrong.

The intention of the 38th section was simply to have a permanent record in hard and fast lines of all contracts which were intended to be binding on the company at the time of the subscription of the share capital and nothing more. The section was not intended to go beyond this.

Within my own knowledge scores of companies have been formed during the last eight years, every one of which is exposed at this moment, though got up with the most bona fide purposes by persons of undoubted position, to be broken up by the sea of litigation which I know is only waiting for the final decision on appeal in the Lisbon Tramways case.

Should Lord Coleridge's decision be upheld, I dread to think of the ruin and misery which will be brought upon a great number of persons of unimpeachable reputation, whose only fault and crime may possibly be having followed the advice of their professional advisers, both solicitors and counsel.

Already, I regret to say, the solicitor who represents Mr. Twycross is sending out circulars pointing out the decision in the Lisbon Tramways case, and suggesting to a body of shareholders in another company that they have similar remedies in respect of the company in which they hold shares. I enclose such a circular, which has been sent to a friend of mine.

This is only the beginning of letting out water, and is analogous to what occurred in 1845 and 1846 with reference to suits against provisional committeemen, when thousands of actions were let loose and decided against the committeemen, until, I believe, a judgment of the House of Lords in their favour put an end at one stroke to the whole of the litigation.

It is absolutely necessary that something should be done for the protection, not of the guilty, but of the innocent. For the guilty the laws are amply sufficient: for the innocent, who by hundreds have believed they have acted in a legal manner, but who, now it is sought to be made out by a new, and, in the opinion of many, strained, construction of the law, that they have not done so, that protection is required; and I venture to suggest as a practical solution that the Companies' Amendment Bill, brought in by Sir Henry Jackson, Q.C., M.P., should be referred to a select committee of the House of Commons, with a view to their taking evidence as to the practice since the passing of the Act in the year 1867, and to enable them, by the light of the information which they will obtain, to suggest clear provisions for the future with, if they are satisfied, as I feel certain they must be, as to what has been the universal practice for the last ten years, a protective clause of indemnity for all past transactions, which should be inserted in the new Bill on their recommendation.

I have to apologise for the length of space of this letter, but the importance of the subject to all professional men who have had to advise in company business must be my excuse.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

A SOLICITOR OF NINETEEN YEARS' STANDING.

TO THE SHAREHOLDERS OF THE NANTYGLO AND BLAINA IRON WORKS COMPANY, LIMITED.

Gentlemen,—On the other side I send you copy of the opinion of three eminent counsel, by which it will be seen that there is every reason to expect that all original shareholders who took shares on the faith of the prospectus can recover back the money which they have paid by proceedings against Mr. Albert Grant and Mr. Carlton (Mr. Richardson having died).

The purchase-money to be paid for the property as stated upon the prospectus was £650,000 (subject to a mortgage) of which £400,000 was to be paid in cash, and £250,000 in ordinary shares, but I have recently discovered that out of this £650,000 no less than £312,500 was (by previous agreements undisclosed in the prospectus, and not known to the shareholders) received by Messrs. Grant, Carlton, and Richardson, making the purchase-money very nearly double what it ought to have been. Under similar circumstances (though not so strong as in the present case) the full Court of Common Pleas has within the last few days decided, in Twycross v. Grant, that the defendants are liable to refund to each original shareholder the full amount paid upon his shares.

Counsel having advised that proceedings should be taken, it will be necessary for each original shareholder who is desirous of recovering the money he has paid upon his shares to commence an action without delay, otherwise he cannot succeed; but it is believed it will be unnecessary to try more than one action.

Under these circumstances it is clearly to the interest of the shareholders that they should combine and subscribe to a common fund to defray the expenses to be incurred in connection with the matter, and each shareholder who is desirous of taking such proceedings should fill up and return the enclosed authority on or before the 10th March inst., together with a cheque or post-office order for £5 per share, crossed to the Union Bank of London.

As after six years all right of action is barred by the Statute of Limitations, and as it is now nearly six years since this prospectus was issued, there is no time to lose in commencing proceedings, and any further information or particulars you may require shall be immediately furnished to you on your communicating with me by letter, addressed to the office of my solicitors.

A committee of shareholders will be duly formed without delay, under whose directions and supervision all proceedings will be conducted.—I am, Gentlemen, your obedient servant,

F. H. DEANE, Eastoot, Watford.

THE NANTYGLO AND BLAINA IRONWORKS COMPANY (LIMITED.)

Joint opinion of J. NAPIER HIGGINS, Esq., Q.C., The Hon. A. H. THESIGER, Q.C., and F. MEADOWS WHITE, Esq., Q.C.

Under the circumstances stated in this case, from which it appears that Messrs. Grant, Carlton, and Richardson secured to themselves, without the knowledge or consent of the shareholders, a profit of something like £312,500 in cash and shares, we are clearly of opinion that

1. The contracts of 10th July 1871, between the Baileys and Carlton and Richardson were contracts within the 38th section of the Companies Act 1867. This fact would be of itself sufficient to make the prospectus which contains no such reference to these contracts as is required by the Act fraudulent within the meaning of the section, and it becomes therefore unnecessary to determine whether the contract of the 25th July is in the same category. But there is beyond this strong evidence of fraud, among which may be specially mentioned the contract of the 25th July 1871, the making and suppression of which, even if it were not a contract within the 38th section, would be circumstances most suggestive of fraudulent collusion between Messrs. Grant, Carlton, and Richardson.

2. We are of opinion that Messrs. Grant, Carlton, and Richardson were promoters within the 38th section.

3. We are of opinion that an action can be maintained against Messrs. Grant, Carlton, and Richardson by any persons among the classes of shareholders indicated in the next answer.

We are clearly of opinion that the original allottees of any of the 5000 Preference Shares, who took their shares on the faith of the Prospectus, are entitled to maintain an action founded simply on the 38th section; that both they and the shareholders who originally took any of the 1500 Ordinary Shares directly as allottees, on the faith of the prospectus issued by Messrs. Shorter and King, are entitled to maintain an action on the ground of fraud apart from the special provisions of the 38th section, and in addition to this it may be well contended that the prospectus issued by Messrs. Shorter and King would also fall within the language of that section, although our opinion upon this last point is not quite so clear as it is in the case of the allottees of the 5000 preference shares.

5. It will be for the jury to say what damages have resulted from the taking of the shares and payment of £100 for them. If they are worthless and unsaleable the measure of damages would be the full price paid for them, even though they might be nominally quoted at 30. The true measure of legal damages would, however, appear to be the difference between the money paid for them and their real pecuniary value at the time of the estimate made by the jury on the materials before them: but it might be contended on equitable grounds that there ought to be a full indemnity on the footing of the rescission of the contract, the allottees giving up the shares on being repaid the sums which they have paid with interest. We advise an action to be brought by any shareholder of the classes named as entitled to sue, provided that he had no notice of the truth of the case or of the existence of the contracts above referred to. In such an action Grant, Carlton, and Richardson should be defendants.

The statement of claim might not only be based on the 38th section, but also might set forth one or two of the most prominent misrepresentations, which can most easily be proved. Upon the statements submitted to us, the plaintiffs comprised in the categories above specified would seem to have a clear case, and ought to recover a verdict.

THE NANTYGLO AND BLAINA IRON WORKS COMPANY LIMITED.

I herewith inclose being a subscription of £5 per share on shares originally allotted to me in the above company, and I request Messrs. Mercer and Mercer to commence an action on my behalf against Messrs. Albert Grant, and James Carlton, for the recovery of the amount paid on my shares.

Dated this day of 1877.

THE NANT-Y-GLO AND BLAINA IRONWORKS COMPANY, LIMITED.

4, Norfolk-street, Manchester, 5th March, 1877.

Several letters from shareholders have been received by the directors, desiring advice on the course they should pursue in regard to a circular issued by Mr. Deane, accompanied by counsel's opinion upon the liability of Messrs. Albert Grant and James Carlton to the shareholders of this company.

The shareholders are aware that they have authorised the directors to commence legal proceedings against the two defendants, and that the case has been before the court for the past three years.

The case was ultimately fixed for hearing on the 23rd Jan. last; but on that day the defendants prayed for further time, which was granted by the court. No special day was appointed for the hearing, but the directors have felt no doubt that it would come on during the present term.

In the meantime, Mr. Deane, a shareholder, has taken individual action, of which the directors have had no knowledge whatever until the receipt of letters from shareholders to-day.

There can be no doubt that the important decisions of the courts in Twycross v. Grant (Lisbon Tramways) and the New Sombrero Phosphate Company v. Erlanger, have immensely raised the hopes of the directors as to the issue of this company's suit; but the directors think they have quite enough on hand with one great chancery suit without becoming a party to a second, and they must, therefore, leave each shareholder to the free exercise of his own judgment as to his course of action on Mr. Deane's circular.

W. WEST, Secretary.

NANTYGLO AND BLAINA IRON WORKS COMPANY (LIMITED).

SIR,—Our attention has been called to a circular issued by the secretary on the 5th instant, in reply to which we are instructed to say that the chairman of the company, Mr. Mason (who is, we believe, the only original shareholder on the board) had a copy of our clients' circular sent to him on the 3rd instant.

Referring to the proceedings now pending by the directors in the name of the company, they cannot be productive of any direct benefit to the original shareholders who took their shares upon the faith of the prospectus, because any money recovered in that suit would first belong to the debenture holders and other creditors of the company, and the balance, if any, would doubtless be required for working expenses, and the shareholders (not original allottees) who have bought at a small price would also participate in any surplus.

On the other hand the individual actions now proposed to be taken on behalf of such shareholders who co-operate will in the event of success entitle each such shareholder to recover the full amount he has paid on his shares, both preference and ordinary, under the 38th section of the Companies' Act 1867, which is as follows:

"Every prospectus of a company, and every notice inviting persons to subscribe for shares in any joint stock company, shall specify the dates and the names of the parties to any contract entered into by the company, or the promoters, directors, or trustees thereof before the issue of such prospectus or notice, whether subject to adoption by the directors or the company, or otherwise, and any prospectus or notice not specifying the same shall be deemed fraudulent on the part of the promoters, directors, and officers of the company knowingly issuing the same, as regards any person taking any shares in the company on the faith of such prospectus unless he shall have had notice of such contract."

Several shareholders have already signified their adhesion to the proceedings, and, if a fair proportion contribute, there will, no doubt be ample to cover all expenses. At any rate, no shareholder will be liable for more without his further consent.

Should a sufficient sum not be subscribed to meet all probable future expenses, those already received and to be received will be returned in full.

In conclusion we would remind you that after six years from the issue of the prospectus, all right of action is barred.—Yours faithfully,

MERCER AND MERCER.

LEGISLATION AND JURISPRUDENCE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

JUSTICES' CLERKS' BILL.

The House went into committee on this Bill.

Clause 1 was agreed to. On clause 2,

Mr. FRESHFIELD said the clause provided that the Secretary of State might, with or without the consent of the local authority, order that the payment of a clerk might be by salary in lieu of fees, and might also fix the amount of the salary. That provision might operate very hardly on some of those existing officers, who, in the majority of cases, received very small payments; and, therefore, he proposed to qualify it by the insertion of words declaring that the amount of the salary in the case of a clerk appointed before the passing of this Act should not be less than the average amount of the fees which he had received during the preceding three years. The hon. gentleman then moved the amendment of which he had given notice to the effect above stated.

Sir H. SELWYN-IBBETSON thought the hard and fast life which the amendment would draw would be exceeding prejudicial. In many cases the services of a perfectly efficient clerk at an adequate salary could be obtained for a less sum than an average of the fees received within the last three years. The effect of the amendment would be to give fabulous salaries in some cases. At Liverpool he believed the average would amount to £13,000 or £14,000 a year. Holding, as he did, the opinion that the justices ought to be allowed to make their contract with the man who was to serve, he would ask the committee not to accept the amendment.

After a few words from Mr. GRANTHAM, the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. GRANTHAM then moved an amendment to the effect that clerks might be paid the three years' average, except in cases where the Secretary of State certified to the local authority that a smaller salary might be given.

After remarks from Mr. GOLDSMID, Mr. KNOWLES, Lord ESLINGTON, and Mr. PAGET,

Sir H. JOHNSTONE moved that the amendment be amended by leaving out the word "to" in line 8 in order to insert in lieu of it the words "on the application of."

Sir H. SELWYN-IBBETSON thought the most reasonable thing to do would be to allow the present provision of the law to remain in force. The clerk was at present absolutely the servant of the Bench of magistrates, and he thought Parliament out not to say that they must not fix the salary. The magistrates were forced to procure the services of a competent man for their own protection.

Mr. COURTNEY pointed out that this was not a question of a new contract, but that it related to men who were already in possession of their offices. He strongly supported the proposal that not less than an average of three years should be secured to the clerks.

After observations from Mr. WHALLEY, Mr. PELL, and Mr. DODSON,

Mr. GRANTHAM said he was willing to adopt the form of amendment as proposed by the hon. baronet the member for Scarborough.

The words proposed by Sir Harcourt Johnstone having been inserted, the Committee divided upon the amendment in its altered form. The numbers were, Ayes 86, Noes 150, majority against the amendment, 64. The clause was then agreed to.

On Clause 4, Mr. GRANTHAM moved to add words providing that Justices of the Peace before dismissing a clerk should, if the clerk so desired, send their reasons for such dismissal to the Home Secretary.

After some conversation the amendment was negatived without a division. Mr. MACDONALD moved to report progress. The Committee divided, and the numbers were—Ayes 8, Noes 192, majority against reporting progress 184.

Lord KENSINGTON moved as an amendment to insert words providing for exceptional circumstances in connection with the town of Haverfordwest.

The Amendment was agreed to, and the Clause, as amended, added to the Bill. The Open Spaces (Metropolis) Bill, as amended, was considered and agreed to.

WINTER ASSIZE ACT.

At Chelmsford Assizes the grand jury made the following presentment:—

"We, the gentlemen of the grand jury, take this opportunity of presenting to your Lordship, and through your Lordship to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department, the views which we entertain (and which we believe to embody the opinions of the county at large) with reference to the working of the Winter Assize Act, 1876, and the Order in Council of 23rd Oct. 1876, namely, while not ignorant or regardless of the evils which that Act and Order were intended to meet, we consider that the trials of prisoners at the Central Criminal Court for offences committed in this county beyond the district of that court have been found to be the source of the greatest possible inconvenience to all persons engaged in such trials; that prosecutors and witnesses, and solicitors or their clerks, have been compelled in many cases to travel unnecessarily long distances, and have been kept waiting in London for many days together before the cases in which they were engaged have been heard, to their great personal inconvenience and loss both of time and money. That prisoners have been unduly prejudiced in their defences by the increased difficulty in securing the attendance of their witnesses. That country witnesses especially, from their being unacquainted with London, are exposed to great inconvenience and risk of imposition, detained as they must be in lodgings till the cases come on. That had the Central Criminal Court exercised its power of summoning jurors from all parts of the county, the above grievances would have been considerably increased. That the speedy trial of prisoners should not in the interests of justice be accompanied by the unnecessary increase of the burden cast upon prosecutors. That our county town on the whole is far more accessible for all parties than London. We consider, if we were to be silent on this occasion, our silence might be misconstrued.

This presentment was signed by fifteen out of twenty-three of the grand jurors; and, after full discussion,

BRAMWELL, J. A., said he would forward the presentment to the Home Secretary, to whom it was most proper to send it, as he was the author of the Act to which they took exception, and he was sure that it would receive every attention; and if the Secretary of State should be convinced by their reasoning, he was candid enough to admit it, and had power to apply a remedy to the evils of which they complained. It is no part of my duty, said the learned judge, to defend what he has done; but I should not like it to be supposed, as it might be if I was silent, that I had not got an opinion on the subject, or that I did not value yours; and, indeed, there is this additional reason for my saying something on the subject—that, before the Home Secretary prepared the measure, he consulted all the judges, and that I expressed an opinion that such a measure ought to be passed, so that, if my opinion had any weight with him, I am in a sense responsible for it, and I should like to tell you why I entertained that opinion, and why, with all respect to you, I entertain it still. No doubt it is desirable that criminals should be tried as near as possible to the places where the offences were committed. Witnesses are generally to be found there, and the trials are more impressive when they are held in the neighbourhood. If it costs nothing, neither trouble, nor time, nor expense to bring together the grand jury and the petty jury, and all the judicial retinue, it might be good to have assizes, not only here, but also at Colchester, Harwich, and other places. But that is impossible, and what you probably would suggest is that there should be more frequent assizes at Chelmsford. But how many assizes do you suggest should be held? There are already winter assizes, besides the spring and summer. But if a man is committed for trial in December, after the winter assizes are over, he must still be imprisoned until the assizes are held here in March; and if he is committed after the spring assizes are over here, he must still be imprisoned until the summer assizes in July. He may be innocent—some of the prisoners are so—and even if he be guilty, he may be worthy only of so light a punishment that it will be a grievous hardship that he should be kept in prison for three months, in addition to which you have prisoners kept for months idle at the expense of the county. Now, what is to be done? Are you to have four, or five, or six assizes a year, instead of three? It does seem strange when there is a tribunal sitting constantly for the trial of prisoners, month by month, that the prisoners should not be tried there. Half the county is as accessible to London as to Chelmsford, and some parts of it more so. You urge that it is uncomfortable to have to go up to London and wait there; but, as to half the county, it is greater trouble to come here. You say that parties are kept waiting a long time at the Central Criminal Court, and that is, indeed, much complained of by the people of Middlesex and London, and I should think it might be remedied, as, for instance, by providing that the Essex cases should be taken on a certain day. You say that prisoners have been unduly prejudiced in their defences through the difficulty of obtaining the attendance of witnesses; but I should like to ask you in how many cases this could be proved. I have no doubt you have been told so, but I have great doubts if it is so. I believe that if you were to examine into these cases you would find some reason for doubting them. However, what I have said is thrown out for your consideration, and that you may know on what grounds my opinion was framed. The question is how to obviate the cost of keeping prisoners in gaol several months before trial. If there was not such ceremony about it, if the assizes could be held here as the sittings are at Guildhall or Westminster, the judges simply coming down and taking their seats and beginning business, it would be easier to hold frequent assizes; but there are commission days and ceremonies of various kinds, which involve a great loss of time. It was made a matter of complaint the other day that we did not have a commission day at Hertford, where it is no more wanted than at Guildhall or Westminster. Where is the difference? Yours is a metropolitan county. These observations, however, I again say, are only thrown out for your consideration, and, for myself, all I can do is to forward your presentment to the Secretary of State, as I shall certainly do, and I have now only to thank you for your services and to discharge you.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

Pressure on our space necessitates our holding over much matter connected with this Department, till next week.

MR. CROSS has promised to introduce this session a Bill, already prepared by the Government, for the purpose of improving the law relating to coroners and coroner's inquests. Solicitors who are coroners—and these appointments are, for the most part, held by solicitors—will do well to keep a watchful eye on this proposed legislation, or they may, from what we hear, suddenly find their interests seriously interfered with. Promiscuous letters to different members of Parliament to oppose an objectionable Bill are not half so effectual as united action.

THE more we look into the matter, the more we are convinced of the objectionable character of two provisions in the Justices' Clerks' Bill, which Bill has practically passed the House of Commons, and only waits the approval of the Lords to secure its passing into law. One point is that of the clause which proposes to qualify the clerks of magistrates' clerks to fill the office of legal adviser to justices of the peace. This will work an innovation of a serious character, as we pointed out in our last issue. Then as to the mode by which the future salaries of magistrates' clerks are to be fixed, it will, in many cases, work a distinct injustice. There never was a more unfair piece of legislation. It will be the means of admitting unqualified persons into one of the most important and responsible offices connected with our Profession. The solicitors' profession has to contend with invaders on both sides—barristers one way and unqualified persons the other. Now as to the point of fixing the salaries. The result of the proposed enactment will be that town councils in boroughs will fix small salaries—such as will not be worth the acceptance of solicitors of high standing and professional ability, local authorities thus making the most they can out of the surplus fees. The introduction of very unfit persons to the office of justices' clerks must be the inevitable result, and the administration of justice will suffer. How can magistrates expect high class and competent advisers in this state of things? In counties the clerks will be better off. There the salary will be fixed by the justices in quarter sessions, and the clerks will be tolerably safe in most cases. It is in cities and boroughs where the injustice will be done. Sir H. Selwyn-IBBETSON said on Friday night last week that the justices should make their own compact with their clerk as to salary. He must be totally ignorant of the fact that the town council has that right in all cities and boroughs throughout England and Wales. If it rested with the justices there would not be so much chance of the proposed clause working injuriously to public and professional interest. We hope these matters will be more fully considered in the Lords, where we trust Mr. Grantam's proposed amendment in the Commons will be adopted. His suggestion was to the effect that no clerk holding office at the time of the passing of the Act should receive a less salary than the average annual amount of fees earned by him or his predecessors during the three years ending Dec. 31, 1876, except in those cases in which the Secretary of State certifies that a less salary may be given, while Sir Harcourt Johnstone proposed to alter the amendment by substituting the words "on the application of the local authority," for "to the local authority"; but Sir H. Selwyn-IBBETSON objected to the hard and fast line which was sought to be imposed by the amendment. The magistrates, he said, would probably adopt the average of the previous three years as the basis of payment, but they should not be compelled to do so. We are sorry Mr. Leonard Courtney's advi-not taken. He said he was not disposed to unduly uphold vested interests, but at the same time would like to secure to a man that which he had been accustomed to receive. If the salary of a clerk were made dependent on the caprice of the magistrates, a most undesirable element of uncertainty he said, would be introduced, and this will be worse in the case of town councils. The Attorney-General represents the Bar in the House of Commons. Solicitors have no representative there, and the interests of magistrates' clerks are, therefore, not likely to be looked after.

MR. G. B. GREGORY (an ex-President of the Incorporated Law Society) has lately asked a very proper question in the House of Commons upon the subject of the practice of the Bank of England authorities in regard to not receiving certificates of death as proof thereof, and in reply the Chancellor of the Exchequer said "he was aware that the Bank of England refused to accept the certificate of the Registrar-General as proof of the death of a party in whose name Government stock was standing; and that they did so in order to protect themselves against certain classes of fraud. They would, however, accept a certificate of burial as sufficient." This practice (not insisted upon in any other public department) has long proved of much inconvenience to solicitors in the ordinary dispatch of the business of their clients, who have died possessed of Government stocks and funds. Persons entitled to dividends on such funds were formerly required to attend and receive the same, but such dividends are now sent through the post, and it is only an uncalled-for crotchety which prevents the official certificate of death from being received in the same establishment, as evidence of death. It might as reasonably be said that five pound notes would not be received in payment at the bank lest such notes may turn out to be forgeries, which sometimes happens to be the case. At any rate, the certificate of death made and exhibited to a short affidavit to be made by the solicitor acting in the matter, and confirming the death, should be sufficient. To procure a certificate of burial often entails delay and unnecessary expense, and sometimes much difficulty.

A new Law Society has been established it seems.—The following is the prospectus and circular letter which a firm of city solicitors have been good enough to forward to us:

Established 1874, British and Continental Law Society, Charles Keene, Manager, 15, Maitland Park-villas, Haverstock Hill, London, W.7. Notice Agents in Manchester, Birmingham, Wolverhampton, Edinburgh, Dublin, Cork, Belfast, Paris, Dunkirk, Brussels, Antwerp, Vienna, New York, Melbourne, &c. I am instructed by Mr. of to apply for an immediate settlement of his claim against you, amounting to £ for goods supplied, and unless the above amount be forwarded to our office on or before Monday next, the instant, further proceedings will be taken to attach your salary. Claim expenses 6s. 8d. &c. I am, your obedient servant, Charles Keene.

We have received other similar printed circulars purporting to come from the same quarter, and one of our correspondents inquires—"Is there any means of getting this document brought within any protective statute? You will see the nature of the threat used, and the claim for 6s. 8d. expenses. We may add that the alleged creditor and debtor (as named in the circular) are both in good positions." We are of opinion that the use of the words "Law Society," the adoption of the professional fee of 6s. 8d., and the threat of attachment, bring the case within section 12 of the Solicitors' Act, 1874. It is one of the worst cases of the kind we have seen, and if solicitors don't investigate the matter, and make known whether this alleged Law Society does really exist or not, and who are the lawyers connected with it, they deserve to be overrun by these quasi lawyers.

THE attention of solicitors was in our last issue (page 339) directed to the provisions in the rules of the Supreme Court as to notice of trial being given after the pleadings are closed. It is very evident that the practice is largely obtaining in the Chancery Division of going to trial without any pleadings, and this is a course which might with advantage be more frequently followed in the other divisions. But in such cases, there being no pleadings, the Chancery registrars consider, and it is so ordered, that the action must be set down on motion for judgment under Order XL., rule 1. It seems uncertain as to whether this mode of procedure may be taken as applicable to the other divisions. In our last issue we published some new directions issued by the Chancery judges as to the steps to be taken for the purpose of bringing on a motion for judgment.

MR. GEORGE F. FOXWELL, solicitor, who was admitted in 1863, has been appointed by the Lord Chancellor, the deputy coroner for Great Hadham, Herts.

CHANCERY DIVISION. (Before Sir CHARLES HALL, V.C.)

Saturday, March 10.

Re SMITH'S ESTATE—HUTCHINSON v. WARD.
District registrar—Jurisdiction.

THIS was an administration action commenced in the Bradford District Registry, and all the proceedings up to and including notice of trial had been taken in that registry. Notice had been given for trial of the action before the Vice-Chancellor in London, and it now came on accordingly.

Morsehead, for the plaintiff, called the attention of the court to the 64th section of the Judicature Act of 1873, and to the Rules of Court 1875, Order 35, rule 1, and to his lordship's decision in Irlam v. Irlam (L. Rep. 2 Chan. Div. 608), and submitted to the court the question whether, having regard to the rule 1A added to Order 35 in June last, subsequently to that decision, this action ought not to be heard at Bradford.

Newton Smart, for the defendant, raised no objection to the hearing being before the Vice-Chancellor.

HALL, V.C., held that, notwithstanding the recent rule 1A of Order 35, the cause had been properly set down for judgment before him.

In the course of the hearing,

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he had seen lately that district registrars had in many instances adopted the course of themselves appointing receivers, and of directing banking accounts to be opened and money paid into those accounts. He desired it, however, to be known that such proceedings were irregular, and that in any case which might come before him he should so treat them; and, further, that moneys paid into an account in pursuance of an order made by a district registrar only would be so paid at the personal risks of everybody concerned, including the district registrars themselves. His Lordship also said that the district registrars were not to take accounts directed by judgments pronounced by a judge in actions commenced in the district registries, unless the judgment specially directed them to do so.

RAYMENT v. DIMBLEBY.

Counsel—Junior taking silk—Practice.

DURING the opening of this case, which is the hearing of a suit with reference to the division of commissions upon the sale of an estate, a point of some interest arose as to the necessity of instructing a junior counsel at the hearing of a cause when the counsel who originally drew the pleading has "taken silk" before the hearing. In the present case, which was a suit commenced under the old practice, the bill was drawn by Mr. Loock Webb, and that gentleman having taken silk before the answer was put in, the bill was subsequently amended by Mr. J. G. Davenport; while upon the hearing Mr. Dickinson, Q.C., and Mr. Loock Webb, Q.C., were instructed for the plaintiff, but not Mr. J. G. Davenport.

Dickinson, Q.C., as the leading counsel for the plaintiff, drew his Lordship's attention to this circumstance, and mentioning that his client was perfectly ready to instruct a junior counsel, and only desired to know what was the proper practice, asked the opinion of the court upon the subject. For himself he had always understood that it was the practice to instruct a junior counsel, at all events in cases like the present, in which replication had been filed. The question as to the propriety of always instructing a junior counsel had before been considered by this court, in particular by the Vice-Chancellor of England in Cooke v. Turner (13 Simon, 649), where a taxing master, who had disallowed the fees of a junior counsel, was ordered to review his taxation. In that case Sir Lancelot Shadwell said he recollected Sir Anthony Hart refusing to take a brief because no junior counsel was with him, and Lord Westbury (then Mr. Bethel) also said "that is the rule in cases now. No one of us takes a brief in any cause without a junior." Sir Lancelot Shadwell then referred to a dictum of Lord Eldon in the House of Lords that "it was of extreme importance to the public at large that there should be a successive body of gentlemen brought up, who should understand their profession by knowing it from the beginning;" and to this the Vice-Chancellor of England added his own opinion, that "it would be most injurious not merely to the gentlemen who composed the Bar at the particular time, but to the public at large, if the supply of able men were to be cut off by preventing the younger branches from learning their profession, the consequence of which would be that it would be a matter of chance whether, when the gentlemen who are within the Bar drop off, their places would be supplied by persons of sufficient learning and ability."

After a short discussion, in which Chapman Barber and W. S. Owen, who were the junior counsel for the two principal defendants, remarked that the pleadings were framed so as to be opened by the junior counsel, and that they understood no leading counsel on circuit would accept a brief without a junior.

HALL, V.C., said that the practice indicated by Mr. Dickinson, Q.C., was the proper one, and his lordship accordingly intimated that the matter should be set right by a junior counsel being instructed for the plaintiff.

J. G. Davenport was accordingly immediately instructed, and the hearing of the cause proceeded, and was not concluded at the rising of the court.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

WE are glad to learn that the efforts of the United Law Students' Society, to form a lending law library in connection with the society, have been so far attended with success, and subscriptions to the extent of about £240 have already been received, besides some valuable law works. The clerks of barristers have for some years enjoyed the advantages of having such a library especially for their use; surely, therefore, it is the duty of the Profession to see that those who will in later years represent our Profession, shall not be in a worse position than that deserving class, counsels' clerks.

THE following lectures and classes are appointed to be delivered and held in the Hall of the Incorporated Law Society, Chancery-lane, during the ensuing week: Monday, Equity Class, 4.30 to 6 o'clock p.m.; Tuesday, ditto; Wednesday, ditto; the Wednesday class in Conveyancing has been discontinued, and gentlemen who have hitherto attended on that day should transfer themselves to the Monday or Tuesday class; Thursday, lecture on Conveyancing, 6 to 7 o'clock p.m. Subscribers are not admitted to the hall after lectures have commenced. The Common Law Lectures and Classes will commence on the 12th proximo.

Queries.

ARTICLES OF CLERKSHIP—COVENANT TO SERVE.—If an articulated clerk absents himself without the permission of his principal, does it void his articles of clerkship? What would be the consequence?

[No, not necessarily; but by so doing his principal and he would both be unable to answer the question required by the Law Institution, the satisfactory reply to such questions as to due service, &c., being a condition precedent to the clerk being examined.—Ed.]

FINAL EXAMINATION.—Will you inform me the earliest time I can go in for my Final Examination, I was articulated the 20th Dec. 1874? A. W. C. [If for five years, in November next.—Ed.]

READING FOR THE FINAL EXAMINATION.—In your impression of the 1st July last, in enumerating the books to be read for the final Smith's Manual of Equity is mentioned. I shall feel obliged by your stating whether Hayne's Outlines of Equity would not suffice. A. E.

[We should say not, but it must depend upon the taste and capabilities of the student in a measure.—Ed.]

INTERMEDIATE EXAMINATION.—Is it necessary for a student to attend the Intermediate Examination after having given notice, and will non-attendance on the part of such student prejudice or make him liable for any fees? W. W.

[No. He would be in the same position as if no notice had been given.—Ed.]

I served from April 1874, to April 1875, when illness prevented my returning to office till October 1874. When can I go in for my Intermediate Examination? Ed.

[If you have duly served, except when illness has prevented, we take it your position is the usual one, and you must be examined (if articulated for five years) in April next.—Ed.]

MAGISTRATES' LAW.

COLEFORD PETTY SESSIONS.

Tuesday, March 6.

(Before Sir JAMES CAMPBELL, Bart., in the chair, MAJOR DAVIES, and ISALAH TROTTER, Esq.)

The late Mr. R. C. Oxley.

BEFORE the commencement of the business of the court the Chairman said he must express his extreme sorrow at the loss the Bench had sustained by the sudden death, since their last meeting, of Mr. Oxley; and he believed that every one of them on the Bench—in fact he had not the slightest doubt that all of them agreed with him in lamenting his demise; and he was sure that every person in the town who knew Mr. Oxley must feel that they had lost a friend. He, therefore, thought they had better ask Mr. Fryer to communicate to the relatives of the deceased gentleman the sympathy of the Bench with them in their bereavement, and of the great loss caused to the neighbourhood through his death. Major Davies endorsed the sentiments of the chairman, and remarked that the more one knew of Mr. Oxley the more one respected him.

THE COURTS AND COURT PAPERS.

TITLES OF ACCOUNTS IN THE BOOKS OF THE CHANCERY PAY OFFICE.

WHICH HAD NOT BEEN DEALT WITH DURING THE FIFTEEN YEARS IMMEDIATELY PRECEDING SEPT. 1, 1875.

[Issued by Chancery Pay Office, February 1, 1877. From Supplement to "London Gazette," of March 1st, 1877.]

A LIST of the titles of causes, matters, and accounts in the books at the Chancery Pay Office, to the credit of which funds were standing on the 1st September, 1875, which had not been dealt with during the fifteen years immediately preceding that date, prepared pursuant to Rule 91 of the Chancery Funds Consolidated Rules, 1874.

No information is to be given by the Chancery Paymaster respecting the money or securities to the credit of any cause, matter, or account in this list until he has been furnished with a statement, in writing, by a Solicitor requiring such information, of the name of the person on whose behalf he applies, and that in such Solicitor's opinion the applicant is beneficially interested in such money or securities.

Every petition or summons affecting any money or securities to the credit of a cause, matter, or account inserted in this list is to contain a statement that it has been so inserted. In cases in which the money or securities affected by such petition may amount to or exceed in value 500*l.*, a copy of such petition, and notice of all proceedings in Court or at chambers, unless the Court otherwise directs, are to be served on the Official Solicitor of the Court.

the peace, to the payment of a fine of £30 and reasonable costs, or in lieu of such fine or in default of its payment, imprisonment for two months, with or without hard labour. The member for Glasgow who fathered this Act would, no doubt, be surprised to hear that it seems to have become, to all intents and purposes, a dead letter, numerous proffers to sell information appearing, as far as can be judged, with perfect impunity in the pages of many of the sporting papers. Mr. ANDERSON is about to introduce, in the present session of Parliament, another Bill for the licensing of metropolitan meetings, which, if passed, would be very partial in operation. Why does not a properly-qualified member—Mr. CHAPLIN, for instance—introduce a really comprehensive measure on the subject of racing and betting, consolidating and amending and repealing where expedient the old statutes?

In the recent case of Ex parte Watson, re Love (36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 75), some interesting questions upon the law relating to stoppage in transitu were discussed in the Court of Appeal. Not the least important of those questions was that which related to the duration of the transitu. In a case decided by the Privy Council in the year 1869 (Rodgers v. The Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris), it was laid down as a general rule that where goods are sold to be sent to a particular destination named by the vendor, the right of the unpaid vendor continues until the goods arrive and are delivered at the place named according to the bill of lading. The facts in Ex parte Watson enabled the Court of Appeal to apply this rule. WATSON, who was a manufacturer, agreed to supply LOVE with goods on the terms that the latter should, during the continuance of the agreement, accept bills drawn by the former for the amount of the goods supplied. The latter was to ship the goods to certain merchants abroad to whom the bills of lading were to be sent, but WATSON was to have a lien on the bills of lading, and each particular shipment of goods in transit outwards. This agreement was under seal. So much for the course of dealing. During the continuance of the agreement LOVE bought a quantity of goods of WATSON, which were sent by the latter to a packer, who was instructed to forward them to the former for shipment to the merchant abroad. LOVE directed the packer to send them by rail for shipment, directed to the merchants in question. A bill at six months was accepted according to the agreement, and bills of lading made out to the order of LOVE or his assigns. This bill was signed by the shippers and retained by them on the ground that LOVE had not paid freight. Before the ship in which the goods were to be carried had sailed, the acceptor of the bill of exchange failed. In the ensuing week WATSON telegraphed to the merchants abroad, directing them to deliver the goods to his agents. The acceptor filed a liquidation petition on the day after the telegram was sent, and was adjudicated a bankrupt. Before the goods arrived at their destination the bills of lading were claimed of the shippers by both the vendor and the trustee in bankruptcy. In Rodgers v. The Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris, the bills of lading were made out to agents abroad, and reliance was placed on that fact in the argument urged on behalf of the trustee that that case was distinguishable from the present. A statement in Benjamin on Sales (p. 703) was quoted, "The question, and the sole question, for determining whether the transitu is ended is, In what capacity the goods are held by him who has the custody? Is he the buyer's agent to keep the goods or the buyer's agent to forward them to the destination intended at the time the goods were put in transit?" This was quoted in support of the view that the right of stoppage in transitu was at an end upon the arrival of the goods at a railway station. The court, however, decided that the transit did not end until the goods arrived at their destination abroad, and that the vendor's right of stoppage in transitu was not altered by anything in the agreement. "So far as the question of the duration of the transitu is concerned," said Sir RICHARD BAGGALLAY, "I am quite unable to distinguish the facts of this case from the facts of the case of Rodgers v. Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris, decided by the Privy Council. In that case it was held that the transitu continued so long as the goods were in the charge of a third party who had contracted with the carrier for the purpose of forwarding them." Sir GEORGE BRAMWELL agreed with this view. His Lordship, in continuation of his remarks, applied the decision in that case to the present case, and went on to say, "It has so happened in this case that by reason of the bills of lading never having been sent from England, there was no person in Shanghai to whom the goods could have been delivered by the carriers, and consequently they remained in the possession of the carriers, and the transitu was therefore not completed." An attempt was made to bring the case within the Bills of Sale Act, but this was quickly disposed of by the court. A question was also raised as to the reputed ownership of the goods, and Lord Justice JAMES remarked that if the case depended upon the determination of that question it was clear that the bankrupt was the owner of the goods subject to an impeachable equitable charge. The vendor succeeded, however, upon the question of stoppage in transitu, and it was lucky, as the same learned Judge observed, that the documents of title had never left the shippers' possession.

AGENCY—LIABILITY OF AGENTS TO BE SUED FOR MONEY RECEIVED ON ACCOUNT OF PRINCIPAL (a).

THE following cases in addition to those already quoted sufficiently illustrate this branch of law:

Lord Mansfield's statement of the law was adopted in Cor v. Prentice (3 M. & S. 344), which was decided in 1815. The defendant had received from his principal a bar of silver, which he took to the plaintiffs, who melted it, and having obtained an assay at defendant's expense, paid the latter as for the number of ounces of silver which by the assay it was calculated to contain. The number paid for was afterwards discovered to exceed the true number. The plaintiffs offered to return the bar. The court held that they might sue the defendant for the price, although he had sent his account to the principal, and in it had placed the price received to the credit of his principal.

This case is also interesting as illustrating the efficacy under similar circumstances, of the defence based on the maxim Caveat emptor. On behalf of the defendant, it was contended, that at the time of the sale the agent was ignorant of the value, and that even if he had affirmed that the silver was of a particular value, neither he nor the principal would be liable unless he knew it not to be of that value, or warranted it to be so: (Chandeler v. Lopez, Cro. Jac. 4.) But here the buyers fixed the price by the estimate of a third person. The contention was of no avail. "This," said Lord Ellenborough, "is a case of mutual innocence and equal error. . . . Much of the argument has been raised by the circumstance of a third person having been introduced into this transaction; but the nature of the commodity made the intervention of some other standard than the parties' own judgment necessary." As to the position of the assayer, the court agreed that he was a middleman, or if an agent for one party only, he was rather an agent for the defendant.

Stephens v. Badcock (3 B. & Ad. 354) was decided in 1832. An attorney, who was accustomed to receive dues for the plaintiff, left his clerk, the defendant, in charge of the office. The defendant, whilst so in charge, received money on account of the above dues for the plaintiffs, and gave a receipt signed "B. for M. J." (his master). The latter left home and never returned, but it did not appear that his intention so to act was known to the defendant. At the trial it was contended at the time of payment on behalf of the defendant, that as the defendant acted only as clerk to the attorney in receiving the dues, the action should have been brought against his principal: (see Sadler v. Evans, 1864; and Miller v. Arie, 1 Selw. N. P. 92); and, secondly, that there was no privity between the plaintiff and defendant. Mr. Justice Taunton ruled that the money was recoverable as having been paid to the defendant under a mistake, and not paid over by him to his principal before notice. A rule nisi to enter a nonsuit was made absolute, the court being of opinion that the money could not be recovered from the defendant, or money paid to him in a mistake. The defendant, it was held, received it as the attorney's agent, and the receipt given was the receipt of the principal, and, if he had not been bankrupt, would have been evidence against him in an action brought by the present plaintiff.

Since the year 1842, when Walker v. Rostron (9 M. & W. 411) was decided, it has been considered as settled law that when a person transfers to a creditor on account of a debt whether due or not, a fund actually existing or accruing in the hands of a third person, and notifies the transfer to the holder of the fund, although there is no legal obligation on the holder to pay the amount of the debt to the transferee, yet the holder of the fund may, and if he does promise to pay to the transferee, then the money becomes a fund received, or to be received for and payable to the transferee, and when it has been received an action for the money lies at the suit of the transferee against the holder.

In Walker v. Rostron the plaintiff had sold goods to A., and received his acceptances for the price. These were transmitted to the defendant, as A.'s agent, who consigned them to his partner abroad. For further security it was agreed between the plaintiff A. and one of the defendant's partners authorised for that purpose, that A. should write and deliver to the defendant a letter authorising him, out of any remittances he might receive against the net proceeds of the consignments, to pay the acceptances as they became due, if not honoured by A. previously. The letter was delivered to the defendant, and he assented to its terms. A. became bankrupt before the bills were due. The defendant refused to carry out the terms of the letter, but upon receiving them handed over the net proceeds to the bankrupt's assignees. Two points were reserved at the trial. The only one, however, connected with the present question was whether the order amounted to an appropriation or equitable assignment of the proceeds of the goods. No rule was granted upon the first point. As to the second, it was argued that the order was revoked by A.'s bankruptcy; that it could not amount to an irrevocable appropriation or equitable assignment of the fund for want of a valuable consideration. The court having taken time to consider its judgment, discharged the rule granted upon the second point.

The argument founded upon a want of consideration failed.

time to attend to any other part of their duties than holding courts. In the end it would probably be found necessary to continue the present registrars, and the judicial registrar would become simply an inferior Judge under the Judge of the principal district, and the country would have to pay a few extra salaries of £1200 a year each, from which the public would receive little or no benefit.

THE CONTINGENT REMAINDER BILLS.

THE compendious Bill introduced by the Lord Chancellor for amending the law of Contingent Remainders, and which has been read a second time, will probably be accepted as a substitute for the similar Bill suggested by Mr. Joshua Williams, on which we offered some remarks (LAW TIMES, vol. lxi., pp. 392 and 416), and which will be found in extenso at page 312 of our current volume. The Lord Chancellor's Bill, which we subjoin, appears to effect every object proposed by Mr. Williams' Bill, and to go considerably beyond it, by bringing "every contingent remainder however created existing at any time after the passing" of the Act within its operation, saving only the right of any person "claiming, or to claim, any estate or interest under any contract or assurance for valuable consideration entered into or made before the passing" of the Act. The proposed Act will, therefore, have a retrospective operation in cases where the heir, residuary devisee, or other person entitled on failure of the remainder has not dealt with his interest. In the remarks to which we have referred, we objected to what appeared to us the unnecessarily prospective and timorous character of Mr. Williams' Bill, and indicated what in our judgment should be the extent of its operation. We adhere to the view then expressed. Mr. Williams' Bill contemplated a suspension of the operation of the Act until a future day (the 1st Jan. 1878), and in regard to all instruments creating remainders made previously (including wills or codicils not revived or republished after that day), excluded the operation of the Act.

Differing from Lord Cairns' Bill, it seems to us that remainders created and existing before the passing of the Act should be governed by the old law; but, differing from Mr. Williams' Bill, we do not recognise a remainder as created or existing merely because a testator who should survive the passing of the Act has limited the same by a will executed before the passing of the Act; in such a case the death of the testator should, we think, be the period which is to determine whether the Act applies.

Our repugnance to retrospective legislation is so extreme that we cannot consider that the right of the heir or residuary devisee to take advantage of the failure of a contingent remainder created and existing at the passing of the Act can with any propriety be made to depend on the fact of his having or not having sold or charged his expectation, or, to speak more correctly, his transmissible interest to arise on a contingent event. The existing law, which destroys contingent remainders and gives the benefit of the destruction to others, is admittedly absurd, but that is no reason why expectations, which, as we say, are something more than mere expectations, or spes successionis, and amount in fact to vested rights founded on such a law, are to be destroyed or interfered with by an ex post facto enactment.

We observe that the Lord Chancellor's Bill confines itself strictly to remainders, avoiding those larger questions on which we suggested that legislation might be desirable.

We observe, also, that there is no mention of the rule against perpetuity as in sect. 5 of Mr. Williams' Bill. There can, however, be little doubt that the rule will now apply to all contingent remainders coming within the operation of Lord Cairns' Bill, since it was their peculiar quality of dependence on the particular estate which alone practically exempted them from the application of the rule. We say, therefore, that if cases arise within the operation of the proposed Bill similar to Cole v. Sewell (2 H. of L. Cas. 186) and Doe v. Perratt (9 Cl. & Fin. 606) the remainders then held good would probably be held void ab initio on the ground of perpetuity.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR'S BILL.

1. Every contingent remainder, however created, existing at any time after the passing of this Act, in tenements or hereditaments of any tenure, which would have been valid as a springing or shifting use, or executory devise, or other limitation, had it not had a sufficient estate to support it as a contingent remainder, shall be, and if created before the passing of this Act shall be deemed to have been, capable of taking effect at the time in that behalf appointed in or by the instrument or other assurance creating the same, notwithstanding the prior natural determination of the estate supporting it, in all respects as if such determination had not happened until the time so appointed as aforesaid; but, as against any person claiming or to claim any estate or interest under any contract or assurance for valuable consideration entered into or made before the passing of this Act, this enactment shall not be operative so as to defeat or affect such estate or interest.

LEGISLATION AND JURISPRUDENCE.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

BANKRUPTCY LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR, in moving the second reading of this Bill, reminded their Lordships that at the latter part of last session he laid on the table of their Lordships' house a Bill for the consolidation and amendment of the Bankruptcy Laws. When doing so he, with the permission of their Lordships, entered at some length into a consideration of the present state of the law, and of the defects which were supposed to exist in the Act of 1869, and, further, of the way in which, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, he proposed to remedy those defects. Inasmuch as the Bill now before their Lordships was to a great extent the same as that of last session, he thought it would be unpardonable in him to repeat the statement he made when introducing that Bill. He said the present Bill was to a great extent the same. A number of changes had been made in the measure of last year after consultation with those who were best acquainted with the subject; but these could hardly be explained till their Lordships went into committee on the Bill now before them. The Bill of last year had passed their Lordships' House at so late a period of the session that it was found impossible to pass it through the other House of Parliament. He only hoped that the present Bill, if it met with their Lordships' approval, would be more successful elsewhere than the Bill of 1876. The evils it was intended to meet certainly were crying, and they had not abated since last session. He now moved the second reading, but would be glad to afford any information on the subject of the Bill which any noble lord might desire. (Hear, hear.)

Lord HATHESLEY said that in 1869 the state of the Law of Bankruptcy was felt to be in a deplorable condition. The last Act passed previously to that year was the Act of 1861, which had been prepared and introduced by a man of great ability—the late Lord Westbury. Returns had been made to Parliament for the year ending October, 1869, and he would quote some figures from that return to show how much amendment was required in the law at that date. By the Act of 1861 a debtor was allowed to apply to the Court for his own adjudication as a bankrupt. In the year ending October 1869, of 10,000 persons who were adjudicated bankrupts 7530 were made bankrupts at their own request. He found that in that same year dividend was paid in 1695 cases, while in 7346 cases no dividend whatever was paid. When their Lordships bore in mind that in that year 7530 persons were adjudicated bankrupts at their own request, they would readily understand why no dividend was paid in 7346 cases. He alluded to these points because he perceived that in the present Bill it was proposed to undo what was done in 1869, and revert to the system of allowing debtors to get themselves adjudicated bankrupts. He was not aware that his noble and learned friend on the woolsack had shown any good ground for a return to a policy that had produced such results as those to which he had just referred. He was aware that in support of the proposition his noble friend relied on the fact that the Controller in Bankruptcy and other gentlemen of great experience were favourable to it, but in the paper in which those gentlemen expressed their opinion on the subject they gave no reason for that opinion. He was happy to say that simultaneously with the Bankruptcy Act of 1869 he succeeded in passing an Act abolishing imprisonment for debt except in case of misconduct on the part of the bankrupt, which misconduct might be punished by imprisonment for six weeks. The great objects in case of bankruptcy were—first, to collect the assets of the bankrupt; next, to place them in security for the moment; and, lastly, to divide them honestly amongst the creditors. But the principle of handing over the management of such business as that to a Court of Justice appeared to him to be a false one. He did not see why a Court of Justice should be regarded as a machinery for the collection of debts. The punishment of a fraudulent debtor did properly come within the province of a Court of Justice. The policy of the Act of 1869 was to hand over to his creditors the management of the property of the bankrupt. The creditors were authorised to select trustees, and a penalty was provided in case the trustees should keep the assets in their hands beyond a certain stipulated time after collection. It was not urged as against the Act of 1869 that the management of the bankrupt's estate usually got into the hands of a comparatively small body of the creditors, and that vast sums of money had accumulated in the hands of the trustees in bankruptcy matters. It might be asked, Quis custodiet custodes? He attributed the evils charged against the Act to those who ought to be most interested in the proper carrying out of a bankruptcy matter—the creditors themselves. The Controller in Bankruptcy in England showed that in those cases where the creditors had bestowed close attention to the management of the estate the Act had worked well, and the Controller in Bankruptcy in Scotland stated his opinion that the failure of the Act of 1869 was due to creditors not taking a proper interest in the management of the estate, and acting by proxy. There were inherent difficulties in the business which he feared no legislation would cure. One was that men of business would not give up the time necessary for the management of a bankrupt estate when all they could get for it was a dividend, and in most cases, perhaps, a small dividend. The other was that men in business often had a reluctance to confess that they were creditors to a large amount of a bankrupt creditor. He could not help entertaining a strong opinion that if men did not take care of their own business, it was no part of the duty of the Legislature to take care of it for them. He might call attention to the fact that while the total number of adjudications in bankruptcy was 10,000 in 1869, it was only 1350 in 1870—the year after his Act became law. (Hear, hear.)

defendant was again solemnly called and did not appear, but made a third default, which said third default is recorded, &c.; and thereupon a further day is given by the court to the said defendant to appear at the next court to be holden, &c., on the 27th day of February, at which said next court, holden, &c., the said plaintiff, by his said attorney, appears and offers himself against the said defendant in the plea aforesaid; and thereupon the said defendant was again solemnly called and did not appear, but made a fourth default, which said fourth default is recorded, &c.; and thereupon, after the said fourth default recorded by the court against the said defendant in the plea aforesaid, according to the custom, &c., the said plaintiff, by his said attorney, prays process, according to the custom, &c., to warn the said defendant, the garnishee, to be and appear in this court to show cause, &c.; whereupon it is commanded by the same court to the said serjeant-at-mace, that he, according to the custom of the city, warn and make known to the said garnishee, to be and appear here in this court, to be holden, &c., on Saturday, the day of , to show cause, &c., why the said plaintiff ought not to have execution of the said sum of £ s. , so attached in the hands and custody as aforesaid; and that the said serjeant-at-mace return and certify at the same court, what, &c.; the same day is given by the court to the said plaintiff to be there, &c., at which said court, holden, &c., the said plaintiff, by his said attorney, appear; and the said serjeant-at-mace returned and certified to the same court that he, by virtue of the said precept to him directed, and according to the custom, &c., had warned and made known to the said garnishee to be and appear at this same court, to show cause, &c., as above commanded; and thereupon at the same court the said garnishee was solemnly called.

Now as a matter of fact, this formality of calling the defendant in court four days consecutively, is not only not gone through, but he is not in any shape or form made aware of the steps which the plaintiff is taking to attach his moneys or goods in the hands of the garnishee. This process of foreign attachment is supposed to be merely for the purpose of compelling the appearance of the defendant; but like many other provisions of all our courts, is open to abuse, just as bankruptcy proceedings are taken to enforce payment of a debt, or a magistrate's court is used for a like purpose. Speaking of the judgment record as against the garnishee, Brandon (now the assistant judge of the Lord Mayor's Court), in his work on "The Customary Law of Foreign Attachment," says (page 75): "The record is a recital of all the proceedings from the entry of the action until the delivery of the copy record, with all the fictions relating to the attachment, and which proceedings are supposed to have been recorded from day to day." This process, peculiar to the Lord Mayor's Court (London), is frequently used by solicitors practising in the City of London, while a somewhat similar process created by the Common Law Procedure Act 1854 in cases in the Superior Courts, after judgment signed against the defendant, is hardly ever used, and for this excellent reason, that while in the Mayor's Court the plaintiff can get possession of the money in the hands of the garnishee upon simply issuing a summons against his debtor, without, however, serving it—the very fact that in the Superior Courts the plaintiff must get his judgment, deprives him of what is most valuable in such a process, because if a defendant lets judgment go by default he must usually be taken to be in impoverished circumstances, and would not be likely to leave his moneys in the hands of a third party, which money could, after judgment, be attached by the judgment creditor. Mr. Brandon, in the preface to his work above referred to, says, speaking of the provision in the Act of 1854, "Probably the attachments under the garnishee clauses (of the C. L. P. Act 1854) may be considered as an experiment." The custom in the city of London has been the subject of inquiry before two Royal Commissions, one in 1837, when the commissioners reported that "the advantage of a speedy and safe mode of recovering debts was obvious;" the other in 1854, when the commissioners reported in favour of preserving the custom, subject to amendments, which, however, have never been effected. A consideration of the whole question, as well on this as on former occasions, in these columns, forces on us the conclusion that the interests of trade and the interests of creditors generally require the adoption in the High Court of Justice of some such practice as that of foreign attachment, as used in the city of London. It is an anomaly that though used within the city, it cannot be used outside it, either in the East-end of London or in the city of Westminster. It would be a matter of very little difficulty to frame a Bill which, while avoiding all the tedious forms and shams and rigmorole and "all the fictions" of the Lord Mayor's process, would secure to bond fide creditors additional means for securing payment of just debts, which is more than ever wanted since imprisonment for debt is done away with, and the bankruptcy laws offer such a ready means of escape to debtors from the payment of their debts.

THE Irish Judicature Bill is dragging its weary way through Parliament, and will no doubt become law this year. It contains a clause which English solicitors have lost sight of, or have not noticed at all. Power is to be given to the Irish High Court of Justice to direct actions commenced in the English High Court of Justice against defendants residing in Ireland to be removed into the Irish High Court. We fail to appreciate the arguments in favour of such an exceptional provision. The English High Court has no such power as regards defendants in Irish actions who live in England. The effect of the proposed clause will be that creditors and others in this country will not sue persons living in Ireland, for the defendant will only have to defend in order to render it necessary for the plaintiff and his witnesses and solicitor to go to Dublin to attend the trial. The provision in the Judicature Acts and rules in regard to suing people resident out of the jurisdiction has already been objected to by Irish lawyers, and the provision of sect. 18 of the Common Law Procedure Act 1853, on the like subject, was due to the efforts of Irish peers in the Lords when the Bill was passing through that House. The fact is, "Irish grievances" are now being made the cry, under the cover of which one-sided legislation in the single interests of Irishmen is being accomplished. This is a state of things which cannot be too carefully guarded against.

THE funeral of Stephen William King, for thirty-five years clerk to the late Thomas Webster, Q.C., took place on Saturday last at Norwood Cemetery. The service was conducted by the Rev. T. Webster, and there were present at the funeral, R. E. Webster, Esq., J. H. Johnstone, Esq., and several other members of the Bar. Mr. King was for twenty-seven years an active member of the United Law Clerks' Society, and many of the members attended to show the regard and esteem in which he was held, among whom were Messrs. Auber, Grant, Lewis, Lovejoy, Payne (Lord Blackburn's clerk), White, Whittle, Wilson (Solicitor-General's clerk), and Willey.

COMMON PLEAS DIVISION.

BESSELA v. STERN.

Evidence—Corroboration—Action for breach of promise of marriage—32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, s. 2.

The evidence of the plaintiff's sister, that, in answer to her charge of misconduct, the defendant promised her to marry the plaintiff; and that she overheard the plaintiff accuse the defendant of breaking his promise to marry the plaintiff, to which the defendant made no direct reply.

Held to be no corroborative evidence within the meaning of the statute.

MOTION for judgment.

The court was called upon to decide whether the following evidence was confirmatory in an action for breach of promise of marriage, within the meaning of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, sect. 2.

The plaintiff's sister, before the birth of the plaintiff's child, taxed the defendant with having got her sister into disgrace. The defendant said he would marry the plaintiff, and give her anything, but the sister must not expose him.

The plaintiff's sister, after the child's birth, overheard the plaintiff say to the defendant, "You always promised to marry me, and you don't keep your word." The defendant answered that he would give the plaintiff some money to go away.

The plaintiff and defendant were Germans, and spoke to one another in their own language. The plaintiff's landlady said she did not understand what they said, but they looked like lovers.

Crompton, for the plaintiff.

Torr, Q. C. and W. C. Gully, for the defendant.

GROVE, J.—The Act says that "no plaintiff in any action for breach of promise of marriage shall recover a verdict, unless his or her testimony shall be corroborated by some other material evidence in support of such promise." I think the evidence here adduced as corroborative is not material. The lodging-house keeper's is quite out of the question. The sister's first statement shows ignorance at the time it was made of any promise; and to rely upon it at all would be to set up a new promise to her, and not a corroboration of a previous promise. To her second statement is appended an expression which does not do credit to the defendant, or show the relationship contemplated by the parties to have been a moral one. I think, therefore, that neither of them is corroborative.

DENMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion, though I have arrived at it after considerable doubt. The nearest analogies are cases of affiliation, and these where the evidence of accomplices is admitted. In the former class, the words of the statute are that the evidence of mother must be corroborated in "material particular." Hodges v. Bennett (5 H. & N. 625), has decided that corroboration of all the facts alleged is not necessary. In the latter class, there was considerable doubt for some time whether was meant corroboration of any particular or of the actual offence charged. It is now settled that there should be a corroboration in at least some particular of the evidence of an accomplice. We must judge from surrounding circumstances. Here, the improper intimacy destroys the inference which I should otherwise have drawn in favour of a promise.

Plaintiff's solicitor, Lewton, Liverpool.

Defendant's solicitors, Stevens and Danger.

VELATI v. BRAHAM.

Practice—Interim preservation of property—Dispute of title—Order LII., r. 3.

The Court, being of opinion that certain jewellery should be secured pending the trial of an action to decide whose property it was, Ordered it to be delivered to a master for interim custody.

THIS was an appeal from an order of a master refusing to direct certain articles of jewellery, the subject of the action, to be delivered by the defendant, under Order LII., rule 3, into the hands of a master to abide the result of the trial of the action. The matter then went before Hawkins, J., in chambers, who said that he was prepared to make the order desired, but referred the matter to the Divisional Court.

The action was one of detinue to recover possession of jewellery, valued at 100*l.*, which had come into the possession of the defendant, and the title to which was in dispute. The articles were actually delivered to the defendant by one Prestopino—the plaintiff said, as agent to obtain a loan for himself upon the security of them; and the defendant maintained, under an agreement with Prestopino, that the defendant should hold them as security for past debts of Prestopino.

English Harrison, for the plaintiff, relied upon an affidavit which stated that the defendant was in impecunious circumstances, but it was not sworn by the plaintiff himself. He cited Taylor v. Ackersley, L. Rep. 2 Ch. D. 303; 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 637.

Cyril Dodd, for the defendant, commented upon the unreliability of the affidavit of the plaintiff, and argued that there were no reasons for the interference of the court.

The COURT (Grove and Lindley, JJ.), remarked that the only difficulty they had in following the opinion of Hawkins, J., was that there was no affidavit by the plaintiff swearing that the property was his.

Finally they made the order sought.

Order to deliver the jewellery to a master on or before Tuesday to abide the result of the trial. Costs to be costs in the cause.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, J. W. Stokes.

Solicitors for the defendant, Chapman and Lee. NOTE.—The master said he would deposit the articles at Child's Bank, where cash paid into court was placed.

ALLEN v. FAIRS.

APPEAL FROM INFERIOR COURT.

Practice—County Court appeal—Evidence insufficient—New trial—13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 14.

A new trial of a case on appeal from a County Court directed on the ground that the facts elicited at the former trial were insufficient to base a judgment upon.

THIS was an appeal in an action which turned upon the construction of a will.

The record of the evidence given at the trial was so uncertain that the court found it impossible to decide what the testator intended.

Boddams, for the appellant.

Bush Cooper, for the respondent.

The COURT (Grove and Denman, JJ.) directed a new trial. Their Lordships expressed contrary opinions of the proper judgment to be given upon the facts as they severally understood them.

Solicitor for the appellant, Hilary and Taylor.

Solicitor for the respondent, Rawlings.

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

Inquiries, as to Students' Societies, as to the several Examinations, as to Admission on the Roll of the Supreme Court, as to being called to the Bar, and as to taking out and renewal of annual certificates, should be addressed to the Editor (Students' Department).

THERE are no less than fifteen gentlemen who have taken University degrees out of those who passed the final examination for admission on the roll of solicitors, held in January last. The connection between our Universities and the solicitors' profession is therefore becoming closer, and that somewhat rapidly.

THE following lectures and classes are appointed to be delivered and held in the Hall of the Incorporated Law Society, Chancery-lane, during the ensuing week: Monday, Conveyancing Class, 4.30 to 6 o'clock p.m.; Tuesday, ditto; the Wednesday class in Conveyancing has been discontinued, and gentlemen who have hitherto attended on that day should transfer themselves to the Monday or Tuesday class. Subscribers are not admitted to the hall after lectures have commenced. The Common Law Lectures and Classes will commence on the 12th proximo. The Easter Vacation commences on Thursday next. The lectures and classes in Equity and Conveyancing terminate on Wednesday next.

WHERE articles expire between 10th Jan. and 15th April, candidates may be examined in January. If between 14th April and 22nd May, candidates may be examined in April; if between 21st May and 2nd Nov., in June, and if between 1st Nov. and 11th Jan., in November: or, of course, at any subsequent examination. Six weeks' notice at least is necessary for these examinations, the same to be calculated up to the first day of the month of examination.

THE Clifford's Inn prizeman, in the January Final Examination, was a pupil of Mr. E. H. Bedford, of 9, King's Bench Walk, Temple. Two of Mr. Bedford's pupils took honours at the Final in Trinity Term 1874, one pupil was honourably mentioned in Michaelmas Term 1874, another took a prize in Hilary Term 1875, another a certificate of honour in Easter Term 1875, and another a like certificate in Trinity Sittings 1876.

AN examination certificate is only available for admission on the roll of the Supreme Court within six months from its date, and must otherwise be specially enlarged by an order of the Master of the Rolls, which should be applied for at the Petty Bag Office.

NOTICES for the final examination, and notices for admission on the roll of solicitors can be renewed within one week from the end of the month, for which such original notices have respectively been given. For further information see the Regulations of November 1875 (third Schedule). We understand that the examiners consider that this only applies where articles of clerkship have expired. In this view we cannot, however, concur. The regulations in question do not seem to admit of any such restriction.

BIRMINGHAM LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.
 On Tuesday evening the 6th inst., the above society held its 602nd ordinary meeting in the library room of the Birmingham Law Society, E. H. Lee, Esq., B.A., in the chair. Mr. Pugh called the attention of the members to the anomalies in the rules relating to the preliminary examination, pointing out that while that examination requires two languages for a pass, the Oxford Local Junior requires none. The matter was referred to the committee. A debate then took place on the following question:—"A. falsely represents to B. verbally, that C.'s interest in certain trust funds was only subject to a small mortgage, whereas in fact it was largely encumbered. Can B., who has acted on the faith of A.'s statement, and thereby sustained loss, sue A. for the loss so sustained?" Mr. Cookrane opened in the affirmative, and was followed by Messrs. Pugh and Collins. Mr. Chatwin replied in the negative, and was supported by Messrs. Morris, Plant and Goodman. The voting was in favour of the negative.

BOLTON ARTICLED CLERKS' SOCIETY.
 On Wednesday, the 28th Feb. last, an ordinary meeting of this society was held at the Bolton Law Society's Rooms, Wood-street. The president of the society, Jas. Watkins, Esq., occupied the chair. An essay on "The influence of the Roman law on the English common law" was read by R. Pennington, Esq., B.A., LL.B., one of the vice-presidents of the society, which was highly appreciated by the meeting. Another ordinary meeting of the society was held on Wednesday, the 14th March, instant, at the same place, when Mr. Watkins again presided. After an essay "On Copyhold Tenure" had been read by Mr. G. J. French, the evening's debate, "Ought Copyhold Tenure to be Abolished?" was opened in the affirmative by Mr. M. Taylor, who was supported by Mr. R. H. Horrocks. Messrs. J. Balshaw and E. Gee argued on the other side, and were ably assisted by Mr. F. Watkins. Messrs. A. S. Pennington and T. R. Haslam also addressed the meeting on the affirmative side of the debate. The chairman fully summed up the arguments, and put the question to the meeting, who decided it in the affirmative, by a majority of seven.

HULL LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.
 AN ordinary meeting of this society was held on the 13th inst., Mr. T. Pearce, solicitor, in the chair. The following was the subject discussed:—"Is the owner of a boiler liable for damage caused by its explosion when there has been so negligence on the part of himself or his agents?" Messrs. Lambert, Farrell, and Winter spoke in the affirmative, citing the cases of Fletcher v. Rylands, Vaughan v. The Taff Vale Railway Company, and Jones v. The Festinog Railway Company. Messrs. Johnson and Martinson, in the negative, quoted Nichols v. Marsland and Hammack v. White. After an elaborate summing up by the chairman, the question was decided in the affirmative by his casting vote.

Another and the last ordinary meeting of the sixteenth session of this society was held on Tuesday, the 20th inst., Mr. A. M. Jackson, solicitor, in the chair. The debate was on the subject, "Should a prisoner be allowed to give evidence in his own defence?" and was sustained by Messrs. Lambert and Adamson in the affirmative and Messrs. Farrell, Gardam, and Brown in the negative. The chairman made some lengthy remarks upon the arguments adduced on either side, after which the meeting carried the question in the negative by a majority of three. The meeting was attended by eighteen members.

LIVERPOOL LAW STUDENTS' ASSOCIATION.

THE sixth meeting this session was held on Monday, the 19th inst., at the Law Library, Cook-street, Theodore Melhuish, Esq., in the chair. After the transaction of some formal business Mr. Suter opened the debate with affirmative upon the following question:—"A. is the owner of the leasehold interest in a house, and by a codicil to his will, after retesting the lease under which he holds, bequeaths the house 'and all his estate and interest therein unto B. for all the residue of the said term of ninety-nine years.' A. subsequently purchases the freehold interest, and dies after the passing of the Wills Act without having altered his will or codicil. Does B. take the house in fee simple?" Mr. Priest followed in the negative, after which an animated discussion ensued, in

NOTES OF RECENT DECISIONS.

HIGHWAY — FURIOUS RIDING — CONVICTION — PENALTY (5 &amp; 6 WILL. 4, c. 50, s. 78).

Few Acts of Parliament are in more frequent requisition by justices sitting in petty sessions than the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50 (The General Highway Act). Indeed it very rarely occurs that a petty sessions is held in any considerable division that a summons is not heard arising out of some breach of this statute. Indeed one solitary section, the 78th, contains in itself upwards of a dozen offences punishable summarily. Any decision, therefore, of the superior courts upon its provisions cannot but be of practical importance to the magistracy. Such a decision is that in the case of Williams v. Evans (35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 864). The 78th sect. above-mentioned, amongst other offences, refers to that of furious riding and driving, in these words: "Or if any person riding any horse or beast, or driving any sort of carriage, shall ride or drive the same furiously so as to endanger the life or limb of any passenger, every person so offending in any of the cases aforesaid, and being convicted of any such offence . . . for every such offence shall forfeit any sum not exceeding £5, in case such driver shall not be the owner of such waggon, cart, or other carriage; and in case the offender be the owner of such waggon, cart, or other carriage, then any sum not exceeding £10; and in either of the said cases shall, in default of payment, be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding six weeks, unless such forfeiture shall be sooner paid." The section then proceeds to give power to apprehend such driver so offending.

Now, upon reading this section it clearly appears that although it makes furious riding an offence, yet in terms, it imposes no penalty for such offence, the penalty being imposed alone upon the driver of a waggon, cart, or other carriage, the maximum amount being £5 where the driver is not the owner of the carriage, and £10 where he is such owner. That this was a casus omisus is quite obvious, and the subsequent language of the section leaves no doubt of its being such, for it provides for imprisonment in default of payment of the penalty in either of the said cases. Now, the use of the word "either," which, grammatically, can apply to only one of two things shows that the Legislature, in fixing the penalty, had in its mind, only the two cases of the driver not being the owner, and the driver who was the owner, losing sight altogether of the case of a rider of a horse or beast. Had it intended to have included such rider, instead of using the word "either," it would have used the words "as any one of the said cases." The power given to a person to apprehend a "driver" offending, and imposing an additional penalty upon any such "driver" who refuses to discover his name, strongly goes to show that a rider was entirely lost sight of in the affixing of a penalty.

This was the view taken of the section by the present Lord Chief Baron, in Reg. v. Bacon (11 Cox C. C. 540). That was a charge of perjury against a person, for his evidence given upon the hearing of a charge under this section for furious driving, and upon an objection taken that the justices had no functions to convict, and that perjury was not, therefore, legally committed, the learned judge held the objection to be good, and directed an acquittal, saying, "It is quite clear that the Act does not give the justices any power inflict any punishment for furiously riding.

The statute imposes a penalty on those only who furiously drive. This is, no doubt, a casus omisus, but it is not for me to supply the omission."

The case before referred to, of Williams v. Evans, was one stated to justices at petty sessions under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, upon a conviction under the before-mentioned 78th section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, for furiously riding a horse so as to endanger the lives and limbs of passengers. The justices convicted the defendant, and imposed a penalty of 20s. Upon the case being argued in the court above, it was strenuously contended for the appellant that the justices had, for the foregoing reasons, no power to inflict any penalty; and, in addition to the case of Reg. v. Bacon, Underhill v. Longridge (29 L. J. 65, M. C.) was cited. The judges, however, not without some doubt, decided against the appellant, holding that the penalty was applicable to all offences, whether the offenders were drivers of carriages or riders of horses, &c.; and the conviction was accordingly upheld. Cleasby, B., in his judgment said, "It is impossible to come to any conclusion on this point without some doubt, and I feel great difficulty in agreeing with my learned brothers that this was a right conviction. There are two alternatives which may be adopted in the construction of this section, either the conviction of a person riding on horseback is a casus omisus, or we must extend the application of the enactment beyond the words actually used. Both my brothers concur that we ought to interpret the section to include the case before us in its application, and I am not prepared to dissent from their conclusion. The question which arises is whether the use of the word 'driver' only in the part relating to the penalty excludes its application to a person riding on horseback? If capable of being so read, the remainder of the section supports the decision of the justices, which made 'driver' include a 'rider.' The same word too must be applied in the same way to a person having no carriage or horse of his own, who interrupts the passage of another, or his carriage or animal in the highway; my brothers, however, think we may read this part of the section in a broad sense, and if so, it is certainly not unreasonable to do so. Although it is somewhat a strong step to impose a penalty by implication, and my doubts are not removed, yet I assent to the decision of the rest of the court." Grove, J., said, "I cannot say there is no doubt about the matter, but unless a large portion of this clause be rendered merely nugatory, the justices have adopted the only possible interpretation. The old established rule is, you must construe a statute grammatically, except when such construction leads to a manifest absurdity. I think the result would be an absurdity if we were to treat the conviction of a furious rider as a casus omisus. . . . The words immediately following those I have quoted relate to the whole of the previous part of the section, 'any person so offending in any of the cases aforesaid, and being convicted of any such offence, shall for every such offence forfeit any sum not exceeding £5, in case such driver shall not be the owner of such waggon, cart, or other carriage, and in case the offender be the owner of such waggon, cart, or other carriage, then any sum not exceeding £10.' I cannot think that the word 'such' limits the application of penalties only to persons driving their own or other persons' carriages. The expression is somewhat elliptical, but I read the words, 'in case the offender be the owner of such waggon, cart, or other carriage,' to be a mere proviso that such an offender shall suffer a heavier penalty. All other offenders, including drivers who are not owners of carriages, are to forfeit sums within the lower limit of £5, by force of the earlier part of the sentence. Another view which may be adopted is, that the word 'driver' is used in a wider sense than that generally given to it, and that it includes a person who rides on the back of a horse, and may be said to conduct or drive it. I do not think that any very great strain would be necessarily put upon the word if it were made to include every person in charge of a horse or carriage, and upon that interpretation, also, this conviction might be sustained. I prefer, however, to look at the whole of the section, and to apply the penalty to all offences mentioned in it, £10 being the amount to which a person offending is liable if he is owner of the carriage by which he commits the offence, £5 being the amount in all other cases." So, too, Field, J., said, "I have arrived at the same conclusion, not without great doubt and some fluctuation of opinion. The object of the section is clearly the protection of persons passing along the highways, and all the acts and omissions enumerated are rendered offences against the law, and persons committing them may be convicted. It would be an absurdity if a penalty were to attach only to a part of such convictions, and that would be the result of a strictly grammatical construction of the clause. I think, therefore, that the first interpretation of my brother Grove is the right one, that notwithstanding the words 'in case such driver shall not be the owner of such waggon, cart, or other carriage,' the penalty of £5 or less is imposed for every offence in the section, and if committed by the owner of the carriage which he is at the time driving, he is liable to a penalty of £10. Ut res magis valeat quam pereat is a rule of construction better in some cases than to follow the strictly grammatical meaning of the words. The conviction will be affirmed."

There can be no doubt whatever that the learned judges in their decision in the foregoing case have decided in strict accordance with what the Legislature intended, though fortified by the doubts expressed by the judges themselves, it may be fairly questioned if their reasons are satisfactory. In cases of this sort, however, it is of all importance that the law should be settled. The present decision certainly now settles the law upon the point, and however doubtful it may hitherto have been, it must now be taken as clear law that the penalty of the 78th section applies equally to a furious rider as to a person who furiously drives a carriage not his own.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT—LIVERPOOL ASSIZES.

Wednesday, March 14.

(Before HUDDLESTON, B.)

REG. v. MARTIN.

Boiling water is not a "destructive substance" within the 29th section of the Statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100.

ROBERT MARTIN was charged on an indictment framed under the 29th sect. of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, and containing three counts.

The first count alleged that the prisoner feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously did throw upon Isabella Ralph a certain destructive substance, to wit, one quart of boiling water, with intent to burn, &c.

The second count alleged that prisoner did this with intent to do some grievous bodily harm, &c.

The third count charged that the prisoner feloniously, unlawfully and maliciously did cause certain grievous bodily harm to Isabella Ralph, with intent to cause, &c.

The prosecutrix, Isabella Ralph, occupied a room in a house off Atkinson Street, Liverpool, of which the prisoner was tenant. On the night of the 22nd Jan. prisoner was quarrelling with a woman with whom he lived, and the prosecutrix having entered the room while this quarrelling was going on, the prisoner seized a pan of boiling water which was on the fire, and threw it in the face of the prosecutrix, saying at the same time "Take that." The result was that the prosecutrix was severely scalded on the face and neck, and had her eyes injured.

HUDDLESTON, B., in his charge to the grand jury, adverted to the case, and explained that the statute altering the old law with respect to destructive or corrosive matter had created a difficulty, because it did away with the word "matter," which was in the old act. The new statute made it an offence to throw any destructive or explosive substance. Although, no doubt, water might be a matter, it was difficult to see how it could be called a "destructive or explosive substance." The difficulty might be only a technical one, but he had directed that in the present case there should be in the indictment a wards at the trial, the case having been by Kinghorn, for the prosecution, LORDSHIP observed that he did not see how it be contended that boiling water was a substantive substance. Under the old law it had been held in the case of Reg. v. Oranford (K. 129), to be a "destructive matter," section 5 of the 1 Vict. c. 85. But in the it they had dropped the word matter, and expression destructive substance, and he not see how water could be called a substantive.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

BANKRUPTCY REFORM.

Following are notes by the Accountant in pty in Scotland on the Supplemental R-y the Comptroller in Bankruptcy in Eng-o the Lord Chancellor, on the expenses of pty administration in England, dated so. 1875, and which have been published by sociated Chambers of Commerce:—

report was first communicated to me on ne 1876, when a copy of it was sent by the sition of Chambers of Commerce of the Kingdom, and my attention was drawn to omments and conclusions contained in it g to the expenses and other results of the system of administration in bankruptcy. pears from this report that, in a memorial Lord Chancellor, by the Chambers of Com-certain representations were made regard-e Scotch expenses and experience. For curacy of these statements I am not re-ble, except in so far as they are founded on evidence and information, and these the oller has referred to and commented on report.

connection with the administration of the pty law of Scotland commenced in 1856, the existing Scotch Bankruptcy Act was under the administration of Lord Moncrieff esent Lord Justice Clerk of Scotland), who en the Lord Advocate of Scotland. In my y of accountant under that Act I found that vision was made for the publication of the os in bankruptcy in Scotland, and I made t to procure a return (a) of these statistics h I was eventually successful. In the mean- agitation (not, so far as I can gather, ed in Scotland) had arisen in England, ap-s to then existing English Bankruptcy 1861. year ending 31st Oct. 1862 (printed p. 314), from which it appeared that the ordinary expenses applicable to the 133 bankruptcies closed in that year where there had been a division of funds were—

That the funds divided amongst the creditors, secured and unsecured, were	78½
And that there were small surpluses paid over to the bankrupts	0½

It appears from the same report (Appendix p. 314) that the time occupied in winding-up these 133 bankruptcies, counting from the dates of award (adjudication) to the dates of the trustees' discharges (releases), was on an average 2½ years.

Since 1862 thirteen years have elapsed, and the results which have been reported to the Court of Session, and in the Scotch judicial statistics, are as follows:

As regards (1) the expenses ordinary and extraordinary, (2) the sums divided amongst the creditors and surplus paid to bankrupts, and (3) the time occupied in the winding-up.

The grand totals for these thirteen years, and their averages, are as follows:

Surplus paid to bankrupts...	27,986 2 0
Less over-payments by trust-ees .....	1,600 4 11
As above.....	26,355 17 1

These are the results of the winding-up of 2715 sequestrations closed during these thirteen years, after a division of funds, or on an average, in round numbers, of 209 bankruptcies per annum. The average time of winding-up these 2715 sequestrations has been almost exactly three years. The average gross estate realised has been about £1475.

These results, as ratio of expenses and sums divided amongst the creditors, do not differ very materially from the evidence given as before referred to.

It is the practice in England to ascertain the results of the footing of the net and not on the gross, assets, as in Scotland. The operation of these two methods of ascertainment will be afterwards explained. It is convenient in this place, however, to convert the results of the Scotch experience of the thirteen years from the gross to the corresponding net assets. They are as follows:

Average net assets per bankruptcy .....	£651
Average ordinary expenses per cent.—
Trustees' commission.....	7½
Law charges .....	10½
Miscellaneous, including allowance to bankrupts .....	4½
	22½
On this footing, calculating on £1000 of net assets, these charges are respectively—
Trustees' commission.....	£73
Law charges .....	168
Miscellaneous .....	47
Total..... per £1000	£288

There are no statistical returns in England from which the results of the experience of the operation of the English law of 1861 can be ascer-tained. There is, however, authentic evidence given before the Select Committee by an official, of the results of its working applicable to the year 1863. (a) These are shortly as follows:

(a) See evidence of the English Accountant Report, p. 39. Questions 2211 to 2215.

Assets as received by accountant from official assignees and others (a)..... £264,539 4 1

It is not quite clear whether the expenses of the official assignees and others, or part of them, were deducted before the above assets were handed over to the accountant.

The expenses as paid by the ac-countant or under his orders were £157,290 0 0 And in addition the expenses of the court were

This represented, according to the evidence of the accountant, 40 per cent. on the assets as handed over to him.

Or on the dividends or assets as they reached the creditors (£489,911 10s. 8d.) 60 per cent. (b)

The difference between these results of the two systems is great. They are both founded on facts and figures which the respective officials have submitted to Parliament. The systems were in many respects different in principle, and both were probably more or less defective in their practice. This more fully appears in a subsequent portion of this paper.

The Select Committee of the House of Commons reported certain resolutions which were ordered to be printed 22nd July 1864. Many of the principles, and part of the practice, which are recom-mended in their report for adoption in England were already in operation in Scotland.

The English Act of 1869 followed, and in it the recommendations of the Select Committee were partially adopted. The system of administration of estates by voluntary paid trustees was estab-lished in England, without, however, surrounding this provision with all the precautions which had been recommended.

Scarcely seven years have elapsed since this law came into operation, too short a period to give it, in ordinary circumstances, a fair trial. The reports to the Lord Chancellor (including the Comptroller's report referred to in this paper) prove that its working hitherto has not been satisfactory.

The comptroller in his report points out this failure, and at the same time comments unfavour-ably on the Scotch system of administration gener-ally, and on its expenses in particular. He states that its economy is "supposed," and is not so great as was represented, and he maintains that the Scotch expenses are very much larger than the expenses of the English administration under the previous Act of 1861. He compares the results of the English experience with the Scotch, and draws conclusions very greatly to the disadvan-tage of the latter.

To these comments and contrasts I think it my duty to give answers.

Before entering upon these, however, it is neces-sary to remove certain prejudices which have arisen as regards the Scotch statistics.

These relate to the Scotch methods of averag-ing the expenses upon the gross receipts—instead of the net, as before pointed out—and of including amongst the dividends, or sums divided amongst the creditors, the payment to the secured (includ-ing the mortgage) creditors, as well as those to the unsecured or ordinary creditors.

The gross receipts represent the actual recoveries of the trustee, undiminished by the expenses ordi-nary or extraordinary, and without deduction of the secured debts. The net receipts, which are adopted in the comptroller's statements and aver-ages, are the gross receipts, minus the extra-ordinary expenses and the preferable and secured debts. It has been the practice in Scotland to measure or average the ordinary expenses as applicable to the gross, and in England as appli-cable to the net. The former presents of course a much smaller ratio of expenses to assets than the latter, and hence some confusion and misunder-standing have arisen in the discussion of the rela-tive expenses of the two systems.

The advocates of the English system protest against the Scotch method of calculation as in-equitable, without weighing, as I humbly think, the essential differences of the two systems. The English are almost purely mercantile bankruptcies, the Scotch are both mercantile and non-mercantile, involving the administration of real estates(c) to a large amount.

The ordinary expenses in Scotland, particularly the commission, and certain of the conveyancing charges on the realisation of real estate, are pro-

(a) Question 2102.

(b) There is a suggestion made by the accountant (Questions 2214 and 2215) that the compensations and retiring annuities involved in the court expenses and amounting to £12,950, should be deducted. The effect of this suggestion must be kept in view.

(c) It is to be noted that, prior to the Scotch Bank-ruptcy Act of 1839, the estates of Scotch insolvent landed proprietors were exclusively subjected to admi-nistration under a peculiar judicial process called the Process of Ranking and Sale, which was both dilatory and expensive. Since then it has been found possible to administer them at smaller cost, and with less delay, under the Bankruptcy Law. Very large landed estates are thus not unfrequently administered in bankruptcy in Scotland.

portional to the gross amount of the assets recovered, and it would be misleading to represent them in proportion to the net assets. Cases occur not unfrequently in Scotland where practically the whole estate is real estate overburdened with mortgages; and the receipts are exhausted by secured debts. In these cases the net assets are nil, and they would disappear from the results.

The extraordinary expenses, as I understand them and deal with them in Scotland, consist of payments to complete contracts, to carry on the bankrupt's business or farm, the payment of premiums of insurance on policies on bankrupt's life, &c., where it is considered for the interest of the estate that these should be continued instead of being immediately disposed of. These payments are all designed to add to the value of the estate by their amount at least, perhaps also with profit, and are recouped to the trustee from the proceeds of the business, the increased value of the contract work, or the stock on a farm, or from a policy of insurance becoming payable.

On this footing they are expenses, occurring occasionally, but have nothing in common with the ordinary expenses, being intended, as above stated, to add to the value of the assets. The trustees' commission and other ordinary charges are to a large extent proportional to the increased amount of assets thus created; and consequently it is fair that they should be averaged thereon as is done in Scotland.

In the same way it has been viewed as an offence, amounting almost to an alleged misrepresentation, when in Scotch bankruptcies involving real and personal estate administered by trustees, it was represented that eighty per cent., or thereabouts, of the gross assets is divided amongst the creditors, while only fifty per cent. is actually distributed among the ordinary creditors, the remaining thirty per cent. going to preferable and secured creditors.

I submit that this mode of stating the sum divided amongst the creditors is correct, as it applies to the case where the trustee administers the whole estate, real and personal, and distributes it among the secured and unsecured creditors according to their respective rights. It is not the case, which sometimes occurs both in England and Scotland, where the trustee's administration is partial—the secured or mortgage creditors foreclosing their mortgages, realising for themselves, paying their own mortgages, and handing the trustee the balance. In this latter case it is only the balance which appears in the trustee's receipts, and the mortgage debts do not appear in the return.

With these preliminary explanations I proceed to discuss the contrasts and comments of the comptroller. (a)

1. The comptroller institutes a comparison between certain Scotch reported cases selected by him, averaging a certain sum of net assets, and a set of selected English cases wound up under the Act of 1861, the results in which are obtained from particular information at his disposal.

The following is the result of the comparison in his own words:—

"I find that in cases averaging (large and small together) £1000 net assets, the Scotch law charges, after the choice of trustee, averaged about £93, while those of the solicitor to the creditors' assignee averaged only about £65, notwithstanding the greatly more litigious character of bankruptcy, and although these charges included the greater part of the cost of realisation which would be completed (so far as it can be compared with Scotch expenses) by an addition of about £19, making together £84, or £9 less than the Scotch law costs, after the choice of trustee, and leaving more than £120 Scotch trustees' commission, and incidental expenses wholly unrepresented." (Report, p. 13).

According to my understanding the comptroller contrasts the Scotch and English cases thus—

	Scotch Cases. Average Net Assets, £1000.	English Cases. Average Net Assets, £1000.
Law Expenses.....	£93	£65
Miscellaneous expenses (in- cluding trustees' commission in Scotland .....	130	19

Total ordinary expenses... £213

Or a difference of £129, or about 13 per cent. in favour of English expenses.

In other words, in a Scotch estate of the above average, value of £1000 net assets when contrasted with an English estate of similar value, the English creditors received £129 (or nearly 13 per cent. on net assets) more than the Scotch. This puts the systems in striking contrast, and if the comptroller be correct, the English, as it was in 1861, before it was changed, was far superior to the Scotch in economical results.

If the law of 1861, in its general operation, were so perfect as is here represented with reference to selected cases, then the investigation by the select committee was unnecessary; and the evidence which it elicited as regards abuses was either very erroneous or very much misunderstood.

2. I do not dispute the right of the comptroller to select cases for comparison; nor do I question the fairness of his selection on the principles he has adopted. But I must remark that the Scotch selected cases have been taken from judicial returns, which present results officially ascertained and reported, while the English selected cases are gathered from information at the disposal of the comptroller, not so officially ascertained or reported.

I have hitherto declined to institute comparisons between Scotch and English cases, by reason of the differences between the two systems of administration, and other peculiarities which prevent a fair comparison being made. On the present occasion, however, I must follow the comptroller into this comparison, and discuss it to the best of my ability, and with an anxious intention of arriving as early as possible at the truth. As regards the English cases, and particularly their expenses, the information before me is not sufficient to enable me to determine to my own satisfaction the accuracy of the expenses as reported by the comptroller. As to the Scotch expenses I am able to give an account of them from the results as ascertained.

3. The first branch of the contrast applies to the law expenses, which, as stated by the comptroller, are respectively:—

	Per £1000 of Net Assets.
Scotch cases .....	£93
English cases .....	65

These sums arise in each case after a deduction of £30 has been made. This sum the comptroller adopts as the "preliminary legal expenses of the Scotch sequestration proper" prior to the choice of the trustee. This is an estimate made by me in notes published in 1866; but it did not apply merely to the preliminary expenses, as the comptroller assumes, but was meant to represent the whole legal expenses of the sequestration proper in ordinary cases (down to and including the expense of the trustee's discharge or release) where litigations and other extraordinary legal outlay did not occur.

Restoring the £30 so deducted, therefore, the legal expenses stand respectively:—

	Per £1000 of Net Assets.
Scotch .....	£123
English .....	95

4. The next branch is the miscellaneous expenses, including in the Scotch cases the trustees' commission—they are respectively, according to comptroller—

	Per £1000 of Net Assets.
Scotch .....	£130
English .....	19

The composition of the English expenses requires to be explained.

The whole of these expenses in England, as stated by the comptroller, is about

	Per £1000 Net assets
But in order, as he alleges, to make the comparison fair, he deducts the following items: About £20, or 2 per cent. of net assets, for court fees involved in the messengers' and official assignees' charges, which (as suggested by the Accountant in Bankruptcy in Scotland) must be eliminated from English expenses for comparison with Scotch expenses, because in Scotland they are borne by the consolidated fund, and not charged against assets.....	£20
About £10, or 1 per cent., for the interim protection and administration of the estate by the official assignee and messenger, including inventories, valuations, &c., duties performed in Scotland by the judicial factor and other agents, and not shown as "expenses".....	£10
About £10, or 1 per cent., for the remuneration of persons employed in managing the bankrupt's business after the bankruptcy, preparing for sale, &c., which in Scotch accounts would be carried to "extraordinary outlay," or otherwise not shown as "expenses".....	£10
Remains .....	£19

In other words, the comptroller maintains that 4 per cent. of the English miscellaneous charges is either not represented at all in the Scotch expenses, or charged to the extraordinary expenses, or deducted from assets.

5. Having thus ascertained the figures, I proceed to discuss the expenses in their order. The first is the law expenses; in the Scotch cases represented as amounting to £123 per £1000 of net assets, and in the English as £95; difference £28, or nearly 3 per cent.

According to the Scotch experience of the thirteen years before referred to, £1000 of Scotch net assets would represent on an average a gross estate of £1550. I have not the means of ascertaining what the corresponding English gross estate would be. I must refer to my preliminary remarks regarding the administration of real estate in Scotch bankruptcies. In point of fact a Scotch estate representing £1000 of net assets involves generally real estate of at least some hundred pounds value. I am not in a position to state whether the English cases selected by the comptroller involve this element, or if so it exists in them to the same extent. It is a well known fact that the realisation of such estate is much more costly in law charges than a corresponding estate composed exclusively of personal property. The deeds, conveyances, releases, &c., are much more expensive in the former case than in the latter; and the greater the burdens on real property the larger are the charges. In other words, in such cases the smaller the net estate in proportion to the gross the larger is the amount of law expenses, which tells greatly in estimating on net results. It is farther to be observed that the Scotch expenses include the expenses on both sides in cases of unsuccessful litigation, which are often very large.

The comptroller makes the following comment on the Scotch law charges:—

"From the enormous amount of the Scotch law charges it can hardly be doubted that they contain (as in England under the present system) a large amount for work which ought to be done by the trustees for their remuneration." (p. 13).

It appears from the comptroller's statement of Scotch expenses in the selected cases that the law charges averaged £123 per £1000, or 12.3 per cent. of the net assets. According to the experience of the thirteen years of the general cases before referred to, the average on £1000 net assets is only £106, or 10.6 per cent. Therefore the selected cases must, as regards law expenses, have been very much worse than the average.

These selected cases appear to have been taken from my reports to the Court of Session for 1872 and 1873; in both of which years the law charges were considerably above the average for the thirteen years; and in 1873 particularly, the secured debts were far above the average, as is shown in the table before given—this, as already explained, diminishes the net assets, and consequently enlarges the average of the expenses calculated on that footing. On a general review of the whole case as regards these charges, I believe that the average of the thirteen years more truly represents the average of the Scotch expenses under this head, than the average adopted by the comptroller.

I admit, with regret, that the Scotch law expenses are very large. I have done my very utmost to get them reduced; but I must explain that I have no direct control over them. They are taxed by the authorised auditors or taxing masters of the different courts, and their taxations are not submitted to my review. Having no materials except the comptroller's statement I cannot comment on the English law expenses.

6. Coming next to the details of the comptroller's figures applicable to miscellaneous expenses, the first item is 2 per cent., or £20 per £1000 of net assets deducted by him from the English expenses. This is admittedly an estimate covering what he calls "court expenses" which are not, as he maintains, represented in the Scotch expenses, or which are borne in Scotland (p. 13), not by the estates as in England, but either charged on the consolidated fund or not charged against assets.

I am bound to explain in how far the Scotch expenses are respectively charged against the assets or are borne by the public funds. It is pretty generally known that there is no peculiar jurisdiction or court in Scotland for bankruptcy. The jurisdiction in bankruptcy is carried on in the general courts of the country (the Supreme, or Court of Session, and the Sheriff, or County Courts), and it is equally well known that the costs of these courts, like those of the equivalent courts in England, are borne mainly by the consolidated fund. There are, however, in Scotland, as well as in England, some court fees, such as in Scotland, the Sheriff's fees for examination of bankrupts and other petty court fees, which are entered in the law agent's account, and thereby burden the assets, and in England stamp duties for court expenses are understood to be charged against the assets. The respective amount of these fees in the two countries is not established.

The courts in Scotland do not administer the bankrupt estates in any sense of the word. The administration is carried on by the trustee who realises the estates, proves the debts, and distributes the assets; and the cost is represented by his commission. In England, under the Act of 1861, there was a peculiar court, whose duty in general it was to do officially what is done in Scotland by the trustee, as above explained. The cost of that court, however, represents, in fact, the trustees' commission. I refer to the cost of this court afterwards.

The only peculiar charge of this character in Scotland which does not burden the estates is the

and in England this is more obvious when it is considered how large a proportion the liquidations by arrangement bear to the bankruptcies proper.

The remedy for this evil, I believe, lies not in the direction of removing their powers of administration, but of so regulating the control (a) over it as to afford to the creditors a reasonable confidence that their trustees or managers shall be compelled to observe the equitable rules and regulations which the law and the courts may lay down for their guidance. Above all, free access should be given to creditors and bankrupts complaining of the management to have their complaints dealt with by a comptroller, extrajudicially in the first instance, or, if necessary, to cause them to be brought before the court to be judicially disposed of. (b) I have long thought that an official list of the bankruptcies, with the names of the trustees published in such way as the courts may direct, along with the general results of their administrations, both as regards economy of expense and time (as is given in statistical returns), would serve as a check to some of the mismanagement of which the creditors and the public have reason to complain both in England and Scotland.

In conclusion, I may be permitted to observe that a favourable opportunity now occurs for reforming the Bankruptcy Law of England as regards the administration of the assets, and for introducing a good and economical system such as may serve as a model for the United Kingdom. It is to be desired extremely that the commercial community will avail themselves of this opportunity, and proceed without prejudice for any peculiar system to promote the passing of such a measure.

It humbly appears to me that it must be seriously taken into consideration that the failure of the Act of 1869 is due principally to the creditors not taking proper charge of the estates of their bankrupt debtors—in fact, using their power in the shape of proxies carelessly, and neglecting checks to improper management on the part of trustees and agents dealing with the estates.

The professional classes and others, making profits by such appointments, may also be expected to consider well the imputation involved in the reports to the Lord Chancellor, from which it appears that it is partly due to the bad management of some of their number that the Act of 1869 has proved a failure.

I have now exposed the Scotch system fairly to the sound judgment of the English community; and I have pointed out what appear to me to be the misapprehensions of the Comptroller. It is the proper duty of the framers of an amended law to adopt such part of that system as is proved to be good, and to reject what is bad. I have no intention of reverting to the subject if I can avoid it.

IRISH JUDICATURE BILL.

THE following letter has been addressed by a London solicitor to the editor of the Irish Law Times:

I draw the attention of solicitors practising in Ireland to the fact that the provisions in the English Judicature Acts as to the appointment and powers of Commissioners for Oaths in the English Supreme Court of Judicature, have given rise to several points, as to which much uncertainty prevails among the Profession throughout England and Wales. The better opinion is that the proper description of all Commissioners for Oaths now is "a Commissioner to administer Oaths in the Supreme Court of Judicature in England." Neither the Acts nor rules furnish any information on the point. I suggest that the Council of the Irish Incorporated Law Society secure the insertion of some direction on the point, so far as Ireland is concerned. But more

(a) I am perfectly aware of the comparative inefficiency of the control which I exercise. This is made clear enough by some of the criticisms of the Comptroller on the defects of the system. I have to point out, however, in my own defence, that I lack both sufficient powers and assistance to do this work more effectually. I have frequently appealed for a reform in this respect, and I mean to repeat my application, which may now be fortified by the Comptroller's criticisms.

(b) The power of judicial correction of trustees ought to have a salutary effect in restraining their failures in duty. In Scotland the court has power to censure or to remove trustees on cause shown; and I am aware of several cases in which trustees failing in their duties have been brought up from a distance to the bar of the court to answer for misconduct; and if they had not given satisfaction to the court they would certainly have been committed for contempt. Questions of mismanagement by trustees are the concern primarily of the creditors and eventually of the bankrupts. These questions are easily raised judicially in Scotland by appeals to the court at their instance.

important is the consideration what, if any, are the changes in the powers of Commissioners for Oaths in England and Wales in consequence of the terms of sect. 82 of the Judicature Act 1873. There is certainly room for much doubt on the subject, while there are many who contend that now all Commissioners for Oaths, as well those appointed before as after the Judicature Acts came into operation, may exercise their functions as such, without regard to the limits of the place named in their commissions, whether Chancery or Common Law. Looking at the changes in our judicature, and remembering that we shall in time have district registries throughout England and Wales, I am convinced of the advantage and convenience of such a construction, and I venture to suggest to the council of your chief Law Society the desirability of removing all doubt on the point, so far as the coming Irish Judicature Act is concerned, by securing the insertion of a distinct provision to this effect in the Irish Bill now before Parliament. We are confronted with two or three other doubtful points on the same subject, with which I need not trouble you. Unless solicitors see to matters of this kind themselves, you will equally with ourselves experience the evil effects of what I must call haphazard legislation. It is only reasonable to ask that all the shortcomings of the English Judicature Acts should be provided against in the Irish Act; but such is our system of legislation that it is idle to look for the adoption of such a simple and desirable course. Moreover, whatever solicitors want in the shape of legislation can only be accomplished by united effort, and by what I will call "a vigorous persistency."

While writing to you, give me leave to say, in reference to your report of the meeting in Dublin as to the proposed establishment of district registries of the High Court at Belfast and Cork, Dublin solicitors cannot and should not attempt to fight against an almost immediate future. Time is on the side of those who demand the creation of district registries under your Judicature Act, which registries are required to meet the present pressing wants of the public generally. Whenever the interests of any branch or section of the legal profession are found in conflict with the requirements of the age and the public convenience, the members of that branch or section must make a virtue of a necessity and give way, if we are to retain the good opinion and confidence of the public.

Before concluding, will you allow me to record my admiration for the resolute stand which solicitors in many parts of Ireland have made against the frequent attempts of certain members of the Irish Bar to secure a further monopoly of the advocacy business of the country. I am entirely in favour of preserving the distinction between the two branches, subject to a freer interchange between them than at present exists in either Ireland or England, but any profession may be said to be digging its own grave which seeks to preserve its existence by monopolies which are not less injurious to the professional tone of its members than to the community at large, who are the victims of such a monopoly.

MR. JUSTICE HAWKINS, who is on the Western circuit, received news at Bristol on Thursday morning of the sudden death of his father.

JUDGE MACKAY, of South Carolina, wears a gown in court in the English fashion, and Mr. Bedford, of the Cincinnati Commercial, has been told that the judge, in the rural districts, has the sheriff, with a drawn sword, to escort him from the court house to his hotel, thus strongly impressing the natives.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT ABOLITION.—The Bill to abolish the punishment of death, prepared by Mr. Pease, Mr. Leeman, and Mr. McLaren has been printed. It is proposed that whoever is convicted for murder after the passing of this Act shall be kept in penal servitude for life, and whoever is found guilty of high treason shall, at the discretion of the court, be sentenced to penal servitude for life or for any term not less than seven years.

ASSAULTS ON JUDGES.—Such a scene as that which was witnessed in Vice-Chancellor Malins' Court on Friday is happily of very rare occurrence. The old law reports, however, give a few cases of the kind, which seem to have been punished with extreme severity. In "Dyer's Reports" (reprinted 1688), for assaulting a witness in court a man was condemned to imprisonment for life, to forfeit his goods, and to have his right hand amputated at the "Standard in Cheape." A case more directly in point is reported in the quaint Norman French of the Law Courts as follows:—"Richardson ch. Just de C. Bano al Assizes at Salisbury in Summer 1681 fuit assaut per prisoner la condempne pur felony que puis son condemnation ject un brickbat a le justice que narrowly mist, and pur ce immediately fuit indictment drawn per Noy envers le prisoner and son dexter manus ampute and fix al gibbet sur que luy mesme immediate hange in presence de Court." The Key herein mentioned was the Attorney-General. Another case reported in the same book (page 188 b., marginal note) records the fact that striking Sir Thomas Reynolds with a stick Sir William Walker was fined £1000 and ordered to be imprisoned during the Royal pleasure—Times.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.—M. Jules de Gastysne, in the Parisian journal, Le Nain Jaune, gives a very remarkable story of circumstantial evidence in a Spanish criminal case, the names of the actors in which are unfortunately suppressed. According to the chronicler, a quarrel arose between two gentlemen at a Madrid theatre, apropos of a pinch of snuff offered by one to the other, and causing the latter to sneeze in the donor's face. Words passed, ending in a challenge. One of them left and went to buy a pair of pistols, and then hurried to say farewell to a lady friend before making his way to the selected battle ground. While doing so, a sneak thief penetrated to the room and was about to make away with the gentleman's overcoat, which hung against the wall. At that precise moment the woman opened the door, perceived the robber, and gave the alarm, whereupon the robber, with one of the pistols in question, fired upon her, and she fatally wounded. The firearm, recently discharged and still smoking, was found opposite her. No one had seen the thief enter or go out, though the shot had been heard. The gunsmith who had sold the pistols fully identified them, and said that the purchaser had asked him to load them carefully on buying them, and it was only after the greatest difficulty that the unfortunate victim of circumstantial evidence was enabled, if not exactly to prove his innocence, at least to cause sufficient doubt in the minds of the jury to justify a verdict of what the Scotch would call "not proven."

EQUITY AND LAW LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—The annual general meeting was held on Tuesday last, at the society's house, 18, Lincoln's-in-fields, W.C., George Lake Russell, Esq., the chairman, presiding. The number of new policies issued in the year was 206, assuring £432,207, the premiums on which amounted to £15,197 3s. 7d. Deducting the single premiums and premiums on re-assurances, there remains a net new income of £11,069 3s. 3d., which is larger than that of my previous year. The income from renewed premiums during the year was £107,688 8s. 1d. The amount of interest and dividends, £42,846 18s. 4d., is greater than the corresponding amount in 1876 by £570. This is less than might be, at first sight, expected; but the smallness of the income is fully accounted for by the purchases of reversions and by the fact that interest on some of the securities representing the new money has not yet become due, and by a slight fall in the average rate of interest. The sum received as consideration for annuities, £44,762 1s. 11d., shows a large increase—£20,619 9s. 11d.—on the previous year. The claims for the year, £37,651 12s. 6d., are exceedingly small, being less than half of the amount to be expected, which was upwards of £80,000. The total income of the society during the year amounted to £212,125 14s. 4d., and the total expenditure to £80,626 15s. 8d., so that the assets of the society have been increased by £131,498 18s. 8d. Deducting the reversions, outstanding premiums and interest and cash on current account, the remainder of the funds of the society produced an average rate of 4 1/2 per cent.

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE PROFESSION.

NOTE.—This Department of the LAW TIMES being open to free discussion on all professional topics, the Editors do not hold themselves responsible for any opinions or statements contained in it.

HAND V. HALL.—Referring to your article in the LAW TIMES of the 24th ult., on the case of Hand v. Hall, I am at a loss to understand how this case could have been decided in the way it was. The agreement, though invalid as a lease, I submit, with all deference, might have been referred to for the purpose of seeing what the terms of the tenancy were, as was done in the Court of Queen's Bench, in the case of Tress v. Sney (4 Ell. & Bl. 36), where, in delivering the judgment of the court, Coleridge, J., after referring to 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, and the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, and showing that the former Act erred in excess by including in its operation all leases in writing, and by giving all unsealed leases the effect of equitable leases, proceeded to say, "This it was intended to remedy by the second statute, which makes such leases of land as must be in writing, and are not made by deed, void as leases, leaving the effect in all other respects as it was before the Act passed." In the case of Tansell v. Parker (De G. & Jo. 559), where an instrument void at law as a lease, was sought to be enforced in a court of equity, the Lord Chancellor (Lord Chalmersford), on appeal, in affirming the decree for specific performance, made by Vice-Chancellor Stuart, said, "The Legislature appears to have been very cautious and guarded in its language, for it uses the expression 'shall be void at law,' that is, as a lease. If the Legislature had intended to deprive the document of all efficacy, it would have said that the instrument shall be void to all intents and purposes. There are no such words in the Act. I think it would be too strong to say that, because it is void as a lease, it cannot be used as an agreement, enforceable in equity, the intention of the parties having been that there should be a lease, and the aid of equity being only invoked to carry that intention into effect." (See also Coven v. Phillips, 33 Beav. 18; Davidson's Precedents, 2nd edit., vol. 5, p. 1, p. 14, et seq.) T. C.

THE NEW COUNTY COURTS BILL.—I have read the very sensible letter of your correspondent in the LAW TIMES of the 10th inst., and quite agree with his observation, "That a great improvement might be made in the County Court system, and in the efficiency of the courts without such a great alteration as is contemplated by the present Bill." There can be no doubt that heavy and important actions will never be satisfactorily disposed of in any other but the Supreme Court, for the conduct of which the first talent at the Bar is required, and no solicitor will ever commence such actions in any other court if he can avoid it. On the other hand, there are many claims of heavy amount, and otherwise involving no particular point of law, which on account of their nature, are necessarily tried in the Supreme Court that could be satisfactorily disposed of in the present County Courts. If concurrent jurisdiction with the Supreme Court were given to the County Courts, leaving it to the suitor to select either, and the judges were permitted to delegate their powers to the registrars to try causes of small amount, it is probable the present judges could get through all the work without any addition to their number, and it may be doubted whether the proposed change will either work satisfactorily or give satisfaction to the public, for the intended two, or, what may be called first and second classes of judges and registrars, is certainly a novel idea. It is also intended not to appoint registrars in small courts as vacancies occur, but the duties are to be performed by the judicial registrars; this cannot possibly answer; if no registrar is to be appointed, the court should be abolished, and the district merged in the adjoining ones. If unlimited jurisdiction were conferred on the County Courts, it would at all events bring to light any defects in the present system, and form a basis for future legislation. A. B.

JUDGMENT COSTS.—In several small books on costs recently issued from the press it is stated that the masters of the three common law divisions have directed that the following sums are to be allowed for costs on judgments by default, where one defendant only: Town cases, including mileage, &c., £3 14s.; country agency, £4 6s. Is it to be understood that when a London solicitor issues a writ against a defendant who resides, say, twelve miles from his office that nothing is allowed for mileage on service of the writ in addition to the £3 14s.? This would certainly seem to be the meaning of the above order as regards town cases; but on inquiry at the Queen's Bench Division a responsible official said "that the masters in that division allowed 1s. per mile for mileage in addition to the £3 14s., where the defendant resides more than two miles from the solicitor's office." 1. Can the LAW TIMES inform its readers what really is the practice on this point? It must be of daily occurrence. As regards the fixed sum in agency cases, it is well understood that a writ issued by a London solicitor as agent for a solicitor in the country is £4 6s., and no more would be allowed on signing judgment. But when a writ is issued by a London solicitor (properly concerned) and sent to an agent in the country for service; (2) would the plaintiff's solicitor be entitled to £3 14s. or £4 6s. for costs on signing judgment? The LAW TIMES has recently been kind enough to answer some apparently trivial inquiries on costs, would the same paper please answer the two questions above mentioned, as a difference of opinion prevails in some quarters respecting the London practice on the subject? In many district registries the costs are taxed on all judgments by default, and without any item for mileage, &c., they amount to £4 4s. 4d.; but in other registries the London practice is followed of allowing the fixed sums, viz., in agency cases £4 6s., and in town cases £3 14s., with the addition of a sum not exceeding 12s. for mileage or correspondence, where this has necessarily been incurred. 3. When a writ is issued by a London solicitor as agent for a solicitor in the country, and the defendant resides and is served in London, what would be allowed for the judgment costs? Answers to the three questions would extremely oblige, it being important that the London practice should be correctly understood.

A COUNTRY CLERK.

[[1] You can in all cases tax judgment costs, but in ordinary cases it is not done, solicitors preferring to accept the scale allowance. When any question of mileage arises you must either tax or forego the claim for mileage and take the fixed scale. (2) £4 6s., or taxed costs. (3) £3 14s., or taxed costs.—ED. SOLS' DEPT.]

COMMISSIONERS FOR OATHS.—I observe that your correspondent "Eighteenpence," in the LAW TIMES of the 10th inst., says that affidavits taken before the English Commissioners are received in the Chancery, Bankruptcy, and Landed Estates Courts in Ireland. This was my own impression until a short time ago, when a proof of debt for the Irish Bankruptcy Court was sworn before me, and was subsequently returned to my client, with an intimation that it was informal, and must be taken before a magistrate. I agree with your correspondent in thinking our title too long. Probably many, like myself, would not be sorry if the form were simply

A COMMISSIONER, &c.

[Affidavits so sworn are frequently received in the Irish Landed Estates Court, and so also in the Irish Chancery and Irish Bankruptcy Courts. See a letter of our correspondent, Mr. H. Oldham, of Dublin, which appeared in these columns early last December.—ED. SOLS' DEPT.]

OUR JUDICIAL SYSTEM.—Supposing that the system of single judges at common law does not work so well as the Attorney-General hopes, and that he thinks the necessity for further strengthening the Bench has not been made out, the following plan would surely establish it incontestably, unless, indeed, it were the means of clearing off arrears, at the same time that it would accelerate the operation of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1876. Let two of the paid Judicial Committee judges be transferred to the Court of Appeal; they might under the Judicature Acts sit as judges of the High Court, in any division as required. If with this help arrears disappeared, on the two first vacancies occurring in the Appeal Court, the High Court would not require permanent strengthening; but if even arrears still pressed, what better proof could the Government desire that a permanent increase of strength is essential? Two of the Judicial Committee judges thus having resigned, under the Act of last year a third lord of appeal might be created. Now, as complete effect cannot be given to that Act without another transferring the jurisdiction, why should not this final Act also transfer the two remaining Judicial Committee judges to the House of Lords as Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, so at once putting an end to the anomaly created by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 91?

SOLICITOR APPEARING BEFORE INCOME TAX COMMISSIONERS.—I was instructed on behalf of a client to attend on the 27th ult. before the Bermansley District Commissioners for the Assessment of Income Tax, &c., in support of an appeal against an assessment. On my entering the board room the commissioners' clerk, Mr. Wilkinson (a solicitor), asked me who I was; I gave him my name, and told him I was a solicitor; he then stated that solicitors could not be heard there; and the commissioners very peremptorily, and, with soant courtesy, not only refused to hear me on behalf of my client, but would not even permit me to remain in the room. My client, however, was required to remain, and he informs me he was sharply interrogated by the commissioners, who confirmed the assessment; a decision which I feel confident is wrong. I wish, therefore, to ask whether you know of any power or authority whereby the commissioners are justified in refusing to hear a solicitor appearing on behalf of a client, and excluding him from the room while the appeal is being heard? THOS. C. RUSSEL.

QUERIES.

134. LIQUIDATION BY ARRANGEMENT.—By sect. 15, subsect. 2, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, the property of the bankrupt, divisible amongst his creditors, shall not comprise "the tools (if any) of his trade, and the necessary wearing; apparel and bedding of himself, his wife, and children, to a value inclusive of tools and apparel and bedding, not exceeding £30 on the whole." Is a debtor, under a liquidation by arrangement, entitled to the same privileges, and is the amount to be allowed in the absolute discretion of the trustee and committee of inspection? There was no resolution come to with reference to the subject at the first general meeting of creditors. J. W.

135. UNAUTHORISED PERSONS PREPARING LEASES FOR FEE OR REWARD.—A land agent, not a solicitor, in giving evidence in a case in a County Court, produced three leases, which he said he prepared, that he did not charge anything for the preparation of the leases or the stamps or paper, but that he charged £3 3s. for an agreement for each, which the tenant in each case paid him. Is not this illegal, and has not the land agent rendered himself liable to a penalty of £50? Is there any book where the law against invaders is concisely stated, with the cases thereon? EDWIN CHILCOTT.

[The agent is no doubt so liable under sect. 60 of the Stamp Act, and his attempt at evasion only aggravates the offence.—ED. SOLS' DEPT.]

136. STATUTE OF FRAUDS.—A contracts verbally for sale of house to B., and it is arranged that a certain deposit be paid. B. gives his own cheque to A. for the deposit, and receives in return a receipt signed by A. containing terms of agreement. Can the signature of cheque by B., be taken in such a way as to be sufficient to bind him under the 4th sect. of the Statute of Frauds? F. L.

137. WITHDRAWAL OF AN ORDER.—If A. gives an order to B. to make him a certain machine, and, before the machine is commenced to be made, A. countermands the order, has B. any remedy against A.? And if the machine is partly made, and A. countermands the order, has B. any remedy against A.? Can you give me any case in reference to the point? E. C. MAYHEW.

138. ARTICLED CLERK ADVISING CLIENT.—RIGHT OF SOLICITOR TO CHARGE FOR SAME.—Will you inform me if a solicitor is entitled to charge for consultations, and for business done and advice given by an articled clerk, as though he had done it himself? I am under an impression that he cannot dispute any one for such a purpose unless he has passed his degree as a solicitor the same as himself. If you will set my mind at rest on this question, you will confer a great favour on me. H. L. M.

[You cannot draw a hard-and-fast line on such a point; but, speaking generally, such work can be charged for as though done by the principal, provided the clerk is a competent person to act in such a character under his principal the solicitor, and the client is at the time content to get advice second hand in the way named.—ED. SOLS' DEPT.]

LAW SOCIETIES.

THE LEGAL PRACTITIONERS' SOCIETY.

A MEETING of the Parliamentary committee of this Society was held on Friday in last week at 5, Crown Office-row, Temple, E.C., at 5 o'clock p.m., Mr. William Gordon, M.P., solicitor, in the chair. The Hon. Sec. (Mr. Charles Ford) read the minutes of the last meeting, which were confirmed.

Mr. Ford said that Mr. W. T. Charley, M.P., was detained on the Northern Circuit, and could not therefore be present as he had intended.

The learned Chairman said that he had conferred with Mr. Charley, and that they were both of opinion that the second clause in the Society's Bill of last year, as to a £10 penalty in the case of unauthorised persons preparing instruments for fee or reward, could not be for a fourth time introduced into Parliament by the society with any chance of success. This clause as read by the Hon. Sec. is as follows:—

"Every person who, not being a qualified practitioner, either directly or indirectly, for or in expectation of any fee, gain, or reward, draws or prepares any instrument which by The Stamp Act 1870, he is forbidden to draw or prepare, shall for every such offence forfeit the sum of £10."

"Penalties incurred under this section are to be sued for by a qualified practitioner by action brought in the County Court within the jurisdiction of which the cause of action shall have arisen or the defendant resides at the time of bringing such action, and may be recovered with full costs of suit."

"Penalties recovered under this section shall be paid over to the Receiver-General of Inland Revenue."

On the motion of Mr. W. H. Wheatcroft (solicitor), seconded by Mr. William Griffith, M.A. (barrister), it was resolved that the hon. secretary address a letter to the Council of the Incorporated Law Society, asking them to appeal to the Lord Chancellor with a view to his taking up the subject matter of the clause, on public grounds, and in justice to solicitors throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. E. Pugh Jones (barrister) said that he had looked into the law on the subject proposed to be dealt with by this clause, but that it did not touch surrogates who, in Wales, obtained grants of probate wholesale, to the injury and exclusion of all solicitors practising in most parts of Wales, and that Welsh solicitors felt it to be a great grievance calling for the active interference of the representatives of the Profession. Mr. Pugh Jones added that Welsh solicitors had appealed to the Incorporated Law Society in vain upon the subject. The learned gentleman then proceeded to show the modus operandi of the surrogates, who used the services of London proctors who prepared the papers for the registry.

Mr. Jones also read a letter from a Welsh solicitor, who said that he lost at least £100 a year by the action of one surrogate alone.

The Chairman said it was clear that the clause did not meet the case, and after some discussion it was arranged that Mr. Pugh Jones should look into the matter further in connection with Welsh solicitors, and frame and submit a special clause to the next meeting of the committee.

In regard to a free interchange between the two branches of the Profession, Mr. Ford read the clauses in the Society's Bill of last year, as follows:—"Every person who shall have been a barrister-at-law for a period of not less than five years, and who, after having ceased to be a barrister-at-law, shall have served under articles of clerkship for a period of two years to a practising solicitor, and shall have been examined in such manner as shall be provided from time to time by regulations to be issued by the presidents of the Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer Divisions of the High Court of Justice, and the Master of the Rolls, and shall have taken the oaths directed to be taken by solicitors, shall be entitled to be admitted and enrolled as a solicitor of the Supreme Court." "Every person who shall have been a solicitor of the Supreme Court for a period of not less than five years, and after ceasing to be a solicitor, shall have been a student of one of the Inns of Court for a period of two years, and shall have passed the usual examinations for the degree of barrister-at-law, shall be entitled to be called to the Bar."

Mr. Ford also read the reference to these clauses in the last annual report of the Council of the Incorporated Law Society, wherein it was pointed out that the council had proposed a more sweeping reform. Mr. Ford said that he thought they had better adhere to their own clause, especially as the chief law society had not followed up its proposal by introducing a Bill of any kind on the subject, and the Benchers, Mr. Ford thought, would never move in the matter. Mr. Gordon, M.P., concurred, and said the time had arrived when, in common fairness to barristers and solicitors some such legislation should be secured, and he did not believe that it would meet with any serious opposition upon the part of a liberal profession like the Bar.

On the motion of Mr. Wheatcroft, seconded by Mr. W. H. Rowland (Registrar of Croydon County Court), it was resolved to introduce these clauses again this session.

On the motion of Mr. Ford, seconded by Mr. Rowland, it was resolved to introduce into the Bill a clause to the following effect: "No person shall appear for the prosecution or defence of any person charged with an offence before a stipendiary magistrate, police magistrate, or justice of the peace sitting alone or in petty sessions, unless the person so appearing is a qualified practitioner, or is specially empowered so to appear by any Act of Parliament."

It was, however, pointed out by the clerk to the Justices of Portsmouth (Thomas Cousins, Esq.) that there were many other matters besides those of prosecutions and defences before magistrates, in which the public interests require that unskilled and unqualified persons should not be allowed by magistrates to appear as advocates. The hon. sec. was instructed to amend the clause, so as to meet the objections in question.

It was also resolved to secure the extension of the right of solicitors to practise as proctors in the provincial courts of Canterbury and York, to the Diocesan Court of London. The hon. sec. reported that he had framed the necessary clause.

Mr. Rowland proposed that the following clause be introduced into the Bill, and in doing so assured the committee that his experience as a registrar convinced him that the large majority of bills of sale were either fraudulent or that the persons executing them did not understand their operation and effect, and that such a clause was necessary in the interests of creditors and the public generally: "No bill of sale, assignment, transfer, or other document mentioned and comprised in the Act of the seventeenth and eighteenth years of Her Majesty, chapter thirty-six, and the Acts amending the same, and thereby required to be registered, shall be of any force, power, or effect, unless there shall be present a qualified practitioner on behalf of the person making or giving such document, expressly named by him and attending by his request to inform him of the nature and effect of the same before the same is executed, and such qualified practitioner shall subscribe his name as a witness to the due execution thereof, and thereby declare himself to be a qualified practitioner, and state that he acts on behalf of the person making or giving the same."

After some discussion it was resolved to introduce the proposed clause.

Mr. Ford said there were many other proposed clauses to be considered, and he laid on the table a large number of letters in reference to the Bill. He also reported that the Scotch Law Society was anxious that the society's measures should be extended to Scotland as far as possible, and that he had been in communication with the Irish Incorporated Law Society through Mr. Henry Oldham, of Dublin, a member of the society, but had not yet heard anything from them.

Mr. W. H. Rowland attributed the loss of most of the clauses of the Society's Bill last year to the indisposition of solicitors to give themselves the trouble of writing to every member of Parliament they know, asking them to support each clause, and explaining the aim and scope of each clause. He was convinced that if this was done, the society would be much more fortunate this year.

Mr. Ford laid on the table several new clauses dealing with other subjects, the consideration of which was ordered to stand over till the next meeting. He also laid on the table a number of letters he had received from solicitors and others on various professional questions and complaints, which were ordered to be brought up at the next meeting. He also said that the society had been asked to prosecute in the case of three uncertificated solicitors, but the sub-committee, apart from the question of expense, had considered that it was not expedient to do so. This correspondence was laid on the table.

A vote of thanks to the learned chairman terminated the proceedings.

SOMERSETSHIRE LAW SOCIETY.

ADDRESS TO THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND.

At the Somerset Assizes at Taunton, on Wednesday, the 14th inst., after the rising of the court, a deputation from the Somersetshire Law Society waited upon the Lord Chief Justice of England, at the Shire Hall, and presented him with a complimentary address, which had been most cordially agreed to at the annual general meeting of the society on the 12th inst. The deputation was introduced by Mr. J. T. Nicholletts, the under sheriff of the county, and consisted of the following gentlemen: Mr. Pinchard (chairman of the meeting at which the address was voted), Mr. H. Messiter (county treasurer), Mr. J. Trevor (clerk of the peace for the borough of Bridgwater), and Mr. Biddulph Pinchard, hon. sec., who read the address as follows:

"To the Right Hon. Sir Alexander J. E. Cockburn, Bart., G.C.B., Lord Chief Justice of England.

"My Lord—The Somersetshire Law Society, on behalf of themselves and their fellow solicitors in this county, most respectfully offer to your lordship a cordial welcome on the occasion of your presence in Somerset for the first time during many years.

Some of us remember when in your Lordship's early days you came among us as revising barrister on the occasion of the first revision of the lists of voters under the Reform Act of 1832.

"From that time to the present your Lordship's distinguished character and career, both as a member of the Bar on the Western Circuit, and as a judge, have not failed to engage the approval and admiration of the whole Profession, and not least of the solicitors of Somerset.

"While we are deeply sensible of the high qualities and eminent attainments which characterise you as a lawyer and a judge, we presume especially to record our grateful sense of the unsparing and dignified reprobation with which your Lordship habitually censures from the Bench whatsoever, in any proceeding brought before it, savours of duplicity or meanness of any kind and in any quarter. Your denunciation of all such conduct has even intensified, if possible, the brightness of that spotless integrity which distinguishes British judicature throughout the world."

His Lordship, in reply, expressed his deep sense of the compliment paid him, and requested the deputation to convey to the society, and to the other solicitors practising in the county, his thanks for the honour they had done him. He observed that those persons were best able to judge of the administration of justice who were acquainted not only with the principles, but with the practice of the law, and that if he had obtained the approval of such a body of gentlemen as the solicitors of Somersetshire, he felt that he had not worn the ermine in vain.

A. LOVEDAY, ESQ.

THE late Arthur Loveday, Esq., proctor and notary, formerly of Doctor's-commons, of Wardington, Oxon, who died on the 28th ult., at St.

Leonard's-on-Sea, in the eighty-first year of his age, was the fourth son of the late John Loveday, Esq., D.C.L., by his marriage with Anne, daughter and heiress of the late William Taylor Loder, Esq., of Williamscote, Oxon, and was born in the year 1797. He was admitted a proctor and notary in 1815, and continued in practice down to comparatively recently in Doctor's-commons. Mr. Loveday, who was for many years a respected resident in Church-row, Hampstead, married in 1825 Elizabeth, daughter of the late Rev. George Wells, formerly rector of Wiston, Sussex, by whom he had two sons, Arthur, in holy orders, and George, who was admitted an attorney in 1852, and was in partnership with his father.

J. CLOWES, ESQ.

THE late John Clowes, Esq., solicitor, of Great Yarmouth, who died at his residence in Norfolk-square, in that town, on the 21st ult., in the sixty-eighth year of his age, was the son of the late Mr. Clowes, also a solicitor, and was born in the year 1809. He was admitted a solicitor in Trinity Term 1832. A Liberal in politics, he took an active share in the movements of his party, and in his earlier career and during the domination of the Liberal party in the borough of Great Yarmouth, Mr. Clowes filled the office of town clerk, a position which he retained until the advent of the Conservatives to power. He then resigned, but he nevertheless continued until his death to occupy a prominent position in the borough, having filled the offices of town councillor and guardian of the poor for many years. "Of late years," says the Yarmouth Independent, "Mr. Clowes had been always engaged as solicitor on behalf of the Caister boatmen, and was instrumental in very many cases in obtaining substantial recognition of services that but for his zealous advocacy would probably have been unrewarded. In matters of local interest there were few projects with which he was not identified, while in the support of the local charities, he was ever ready to accord them a hearty and generous assistance. Among the more recent of the projects for the improvement of the town with which Mr. Clowes was associated was the Yarmouth and Stalham Railway, in which he took a warm interest, and, as one of the directors of the company, assisted, both by his influence and pecuniary support, in obtaining the Bill and promoting the construction of the line. He was also a director of the Free Press Newspaper and Printing Company, in the formation of which, and in its promotion to its present successful position, he was ever zealously engaged."

E. T. WHITAKER, ESQ.

THE late Edward Thomas Whitaker, Esq., solicitor, of Lincoln's-inn-fields, who died at Hinton, Berks, on the 6th ult., in the seventy-sixth year of his age, was the third son of the late Philip Whitaker, Esq., of Bratton, in the county of Wilts. He was born at Bratton in the year 1802, and was admitted a solicitor in Hilary Term, 1823. He was appointed in 1833 the solicitor for the affairs of Her Majesty's Dues of Lancaster, which he resigned in the year 1851. Mr. Whitaker married Emily Ann, daughter of Thomas Dedrick Woolbert, Esq., by whom he has left nine children. The remains of the deceased gentleman were interred at Hurst, Berkshire.

T. P. L. HALLETT, ESQ.

THE late Thomas Perham Luxmore Hallett, Esq., LL.B., barrister-at-law, of Lincoln's-inn, who died at his residence in Bolton-row, May Fair, on the 4th inst., in the seventy-fifth year of his age, was the only son of the late Capt. Samuel Hallett, of the Dorset Yeomanry Cavalry, of Chideock, Dorset, and Richmond, Surrey, by Jersey, his second wife, daughter and co-heiress of the late Thomas Perham, Esq., of Well Court, Dorset (whose ancestor, Sir William Periam, or Perham, was Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, temp. Queen Elizabeth). The Anglo-Saxon family of Hallett, or Hallett, which the deceased gentleman represented, and which claims a direct Royal descent from King Edward III., is of great antiquity in the southern counties of England, having formerly for upwards of 400 years been settled at Misterton, in Somersetshire, where they continued large landed proprietors till the commencement of this century. Born at West Chelborough on the 18th Feb. 1803, Mr. Hallett was educated at St. Paul's School, and at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated LL.B. in 1828, being bracketed second in the first of the law classes, with Mr. Prendergast, Q.C., and subsequently was elected a Fellow, together with the present Lord Chief Justice of England, with whom, as with the late Lord Lytton, Mr. Hallett was a college contemporary. Having devoted himself to the study of law, and read for the usual periods in the chambers of Messrs. Stinton and P. B. Brodie, the then eminent conveyancer. He was called to the Bar by the Honourable Society of Lincoln's-inn, in Trinity Term granted the application. The view taken by his lordship of the right of a defendant to have the cause, in which he is a party, tried before a judge, with a jury, is in harmony with the decisions. In his opinion that right is subject only to the discretion conferred on the court by rule 26. That discretion, as we have seen, is confined to cases which, before the passing of the Judicature Act, the court could have tried without a jury without the consent of the parties. The Vice-Chancellor cannot be said to have thrown any new light upon the law, although his decision in West v. White contains a useful summary of the defendant's rights. At any rate it is satisfactory that a question of such practical importance as that relating to the right of a defendant to demand a jury has been settled. It was said by Vice-Chancellor HALL, in Clarke v. Cookson (2 R. C. Ch. Div. 946), with reference to Order XXXVI., rule 26, "This rule was framed expressly to meet cases which would, under the old system, have been tried in the Chancery Division, and which might be considered, by reason of involving a mixture of law and fact, or from great complexity or otherwise, not capable of being conveniently tried before a jury, when the case is of a nature fit to be tried by a jury, the right of the plaintiff or defendant should ordinarily not be interfered with." These remarks do not appear to have been quoted in West v. White. There is no doubt they would have met with the approval of Vice-Chancellor BACON.

A COMMISSION, composed of eminent and practical members of the legal profession, has been appointed to enquire into the working of the Judicature Acts, with particular reference to the chamber clerks of Judges at Chambers appointed under sect. 79 of the Act of 1873. As to Judges' Chambers, the present disgraceful condition of things is not due in any sense to the Judicature Acts; but we hope it will not escape close scrutiny on that score. There are, however, abundant abuses connected with the Acts, if we look at what it was intended to effect by them. Where are the continuous sittings at Nisi Prius in London and Middlesex? Where is the Divisional Court? The sittings at Nisi Prius, so far from being continuous are fitful and visionary—a will o' the wisp vainly pursued by suitors, jurymen, solicitors, and counsel. The Divisional Court appears and disappears according to circumstances; and, when it does appear, it knows its own failings too well to be strict with counsel, who take all sorts of liberties with it, and occupy much of its time in applications that cases may stand over, or be restored when quite properly struck out. But all this is due to the fact that all the Judges have been scattered over the face of the country trying sessions cases and civil causes in too many instances of insignificant proportions. Until the assize system is remodelled, it is difficult to see how the London business, which is the principal business of the kingdom, can be properly dealt with. And we trust that the abuses of the Referees' Courts will not escape attention. The question of fees, the prodigious delays, and the efficiency of the tribunal, should be carefully considered. These courts should relieve the judges of much work; but suitors will frequently make any sacrifice to escape the ordeal of proceeding before an official referee.

THE Court of Appeal, in Cohen v. The South-Eastern Railway Company, reported last week (36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 130), affirmed an important principle that sect. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act 1854 applies to passengers' luggage, and is extended by sect. 19 of the Regulation of Railways Act 1868 to traffic by railway companies' steamers, and therefore a condition, printed on a through ticket for a journey from Boulogne to London by the company's steamer and railway which professed to limit the company's liability for loss of or injury to passengers' luggage, was void. The point was first decided on demurrer by the Exchequer Division (35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 213), and the case was brought before the courts a second time under rather curious circumstances. When the Exchequer Division gave judgment for the plaintiff the defendants obtained leave to amend, and add a plea to the effect that the contract between the plaintiff and the railway company was a French contract, and that by French law the company were exempt from liability. A special case was afterwards stated, embodying the opinion of a French avocat as to the law of France applicable to the case. The opinion was decisive against the company, if the contract was to be interpreted by French law, and therefore the defendants' counsel, who had appealed to the French law, were obliged to change their tactics, and contend before the Court of Appeal (the Exchequer Division having giving judgment for the plaintiff on the special case, following their own judgment on demurrer), that the contract was governed by the law of England. The Court, without calling on the plaintiff's counsel, unhesitatingly affirmed the judgment, holding, that if the case was governed by English law, the statutory provisions above referred to applied, that the condition was void, and the Company were liable. If the French law ought to prevail, their liability was beyond question. The attempt to avoid liability by resorting to the French law was therefore a signal failure. It became unnecessary to decide which law governed the contract, but two of the three Judges seemed inclined to think that the English law applied. If this is the correct view, there is a conflict between the law of France and England, for the opinion of M. RONCIER, set out in the special case, distinctly states that if the case came before a French tribunal it would be decided according to French law. The main point seems very clear, as far as the words of the statutes are concerned, and the Court has got rid of the difficulty raised by Stewart v. The London and North-Western Railway Company (10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 302), and Doolan v. The Midland Railway Company (Ir. Rep. 10 C. L. 47), by declaring that those decisions are not good law. As the damage sued for was caused by negligence, the court was not called on to decide whether railway companies are common carriers of passengers' luggage or not, but the balance of authority seems to be in favour of the view that they are. It should, however, be observed, as was pointed out by MELLISH, L.J., that this decision will not have the effect of subjecting railway companies forwarding goods by sea to all the liabilities of carriers by land, for, by sect 14 of the Regulation of Railways Act 1868, they have the power of limiting their liability by a notice excepting those perils which are usually excepted in bills of lading.

IN a summary of the principles relating to marine insurance as affected by the decisions within the last two years, published in these columns on the 17th inst., reference was made to Dudgeon v. Pembroke, as being a decision of a most unsatisfactory character and indeed being one which could not be accepted as an authority. We are happy to say that the reversal of established law by that case has been rectified in the House of Lords—the Exchequer Chamber (which was led into error mainly by Lord COLERIDGE) having been set right, and Gibson v. Small restored to the position of a leading case of clear and unmistakeable signification, which in the opinion of all insurance lawyers it was entitled to hold. Lord COLERIDGE distinguished Gibson v. Small from Dudgeon v. Pembroke on the ground that in the latter case the policy was on time for a particular voyage. We pointed out at the time when his decision was delivered that this one fact could not introduce an implied warranty into a time policy. The only case in which an assured under a time policy can lose the benefit thereof on account of the ship's unseaworthiness is that where the circumstances are such as existed in Thompson v. Hopper. If a shipowner knowingly sends a ship to sea unseaworthy he commits a fraud on his underwriters. It is equally idle to contend that a ship is not lost by perils of the sea, though the proximate cause of the loss is a peril of the sea, because she was unseaworthy at starting. The decision of the majority of the Exchequer Chamber deviated from two well established principles, but probably little harm has been done, as everyone must have contemplated that the House of Lords would correct the blunder.

THE difficulty of giving a satisfactory definition of legal terms is well illustrated by the judgment of the MASTER of the ROLLS in the recent case of Pooley v. Driver (36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 79), where his Lordship considered at some length the meaning of the term "partnership." Mr. Justice LINDLEY in his work says very truly, "to frame a definition of any legal term which shall be both positively and negatively accurate, is possible only to those who, having legislative authority, can adapt the law to their own definition. Other persons have to take the law as they find it; and rarely indeed is it in their power to frame any definition to which exception may not be taken. All that they can usefully attempt is to analyse the meanings of the words they use, and to take care not to employ the same word in different senses, where so to do could possibly lead to confusion." The learned author thereupon presents his reader with a page and a half of definitions selected from the writings of authors of celebrity, such as POTHIER, THIBAUT, STORY, KENT, and VINNIUS, all of which, however, with a single exception, are, with reference to the law of England, too wide. In the case which came before the MASTER of the ROLLS the question to be decided was whether some contracts which had been entered into made the defendants partners in a certain firm. The first question to be resolved was what sort of evidence must be relied on to prove a partnership; but the learned Judge would not, any more than Mr. Justice LINDLEY, attempt to define a partnership. That it is a contract is clear, and therefore it involves the mutual consent of all parties. It is a contract to carry on a commercial business and dividing the profits. The definition in the New York Civil Code is that partnership is the association of two or more persons for the purpose of carrying on business together and divide its profits. As a general rule this definition is sufficient. But each partner contributes something—money or skill. This is not a universal rule in English law, for there is the case of the dormant partners, who contribute neither one nor the other. Hence CHANCELLOR KENT's definition, which turns upon this contribution, is not accurate. The New York Code makes no mention of the nature of partnership business. Hence, as the MASTER of the ROLLS pointed out, the business might be that of highwaymen. POTHIER gets over this difficulty by stating that the business must be to make in common an honest profit, but he also says that there must be something in common, which according to English law considerably in cash advance for the firm, and the consignments and remittances hitherto advised will, we think, fall short of the engagements we are under on their account. We have, however, registered the above, and should remittances or consignments come forward to enable us to meet their wishes, we shall lose no time in advising you." The defendants afterwards wrote to their principal that the state of the accounts did not warrant the payment to the plaintiff. The court held that the defendants had entered into no positive engagement to pay the money, and that consequently the plaintiff had no right of action.

Lord Ellenborough said in Willis v. Freeman (12 East, 656), that the case of Wilkins v. Carey (7 T. Rep. 711) established the principle that if a man who has funds in his hands belonging to a trader who has committed a secret act of bankruptcy, accept a bill for that trader without knowing of such act of bankruptcy, he may apply those funds when the bill becomes due, and to the discharge of his own acceptance. The same Judge ruled in another case (Madden v. Kempster, 1 Camp. 12) that if A. is under acceptance to B., he may retain money of B.'s in his hands to discharge it, either until the bill is delivered up to him, or until he receives a bond of indemnity against being sued upon it. So it was held in a subsequent case (Morse v. Williams, 3 Camp. 418), that where a sum of money has been lodged with a party to indemnify him against bills of exchange accepted by him for the accommodation of another, an action will not lie against him to recover the money while the bills are outstanding, although they are within the Statute of Limitations.

The question was much discussed in a later case decided by the Common Pleas in 1850 (Bates v. Hoppe, 9 C. B. 541). The action was brought by the assignees of a bankrupt to recover from the defendant a sum of money lodged in his hands to meet an accommodation bill of which he was the acceptor and the bankrupt the drawer. Before the maturity of the bill the drawer became bankrupt, and the court held that the assignees could not recover. "The question is," said Mr. Justice Maule, "whether the bankrupt could have revoked that destination of the money, and could have called upon the defendant to return it to him. . . . An act done in performance of a binding contract is not recoverable. The acceptance of the bill was a good consideration for the contract to indemnify."

Want of privity between the agent and third parties has often proved fatal to the right of the latter to recover money from the agent. Thus, where there were several joint owners of a ship, and A., the managing owner, employed C. as general agent, and to receive and pay moneys on account of the ship, C. kept a separate account in his books with B. as managing owner. To obtain payment of a sum of money due from a certain company on account of the ship, it was necessary that the receipt should be signed by one or more of the owners, besides the managing owners. Upon a receipt being signed by A., one of the other owners, C., received on account of the ship £2000 from the company in question, and placed it to A.'s credit in his books as managing owner. The other part owners brought an action to recover the balance of that account against the agent, but the court held he had received the money as agent of A., and was accountable to him for it, and that there was no privity between the plaintiffs and the defendant: (Sims v. Brittain, 2 N. & M. 594; 4 B. & Ad. 375; Tennant v. Mackintosh, 1 B. & Ad. 594.)

An agent cannot be called upon to restore to third parties money which he has paid over to his principal, which he had no right to withhold from his principal. Certain bills of exchange were drawn upon and accepted by the East India Company in favour of W. H. They were afterwards endorsed to D. and C. by an agent of W. H. under a supposed authority given by a power of attorney, which was seen and inspected by the acceptors. D. and C. indorsed the bill to B. and Co. (the defendants), their bankers, in order that the latter might, as their agent, present them for payment when due. B. and Co. put their names on the back of the bills, presented them for payment, and received the amount. This they paid over to their principals. When it was discovered that the power of attorney did not authorise the agent to indorse the bills, the administrator of W. H. in an action against the acceptors recovered the amount of them. The acceptors then brought an action against B. and Co., and declared on a supposed undertaking, that they, as holders, were entitled to receive the amount of the bills. The jury found that the plaintiffs paid the bills on the faith of the power of attorney, and not of the indorsement by the defendants, and that the latter paid over the money before they had notice of the invalidity of the first indorsement. The court decided that there was no ground for the action: (The East India Company v. Trillon, 3 B. & C. 280, 1824.) It is to be noticed that the power of attorney was not produced by the defendants, nor was there any evidence that they had any means of estimating its sufficiency, and further that the insufficiency of the authority was not discovered until the money had been paid over by the defendants to their principals, and that if there was negligence it was due to the plaintiffs' mistake on a point of law: (See Bilbie v. Lumley, 2 East, 469.)

A. paid into the Totness County Bank a quantity of notes of a bank at Dartmouth, to bear interest from that day. The Totness bankers sent mouth bank. Upon their receipt there the latter, according to their usual course of business with the Totness bankers, gave them credit in account for the amount of the notes. The course of dealing between the two banks was that if the Totness Bank received notes of the Dartmouth Bank in the course of the day, they sent the notes on the following morning to the Dartmouth Bank. If the Dartmouth Bank received notes of the Totness Bank, they at the close of the business of the day sent them to the Totness Bank. If the balance of the day was in favour of either bank, the amount was paid by a bill upon their respective agents in London. The Dartmouth Bank continued to pay their notes until the evening next following the day on which A. paid the notes into the Totness Bank. In an action by A. against the Totness bankers, he recovered the amount of the notes on the ground that as between the plaintiff and defendants the taking of credit in account for the amount of the Dartmouth notes was equivalent to payment to the Totness bankers (Gillard v. Wise, 5 B. & C. 134, 1826). Here the Dartmouth bankers were made the agents of the Totness bankers, the latter authorising the former by the course of dealing, to give credit in account for their own notes, instead of paying them immediately in money. If the notes had been of no value at the time they were deposited, the case, as pointed out by Mr. Justice Holroyd, would have been very different.

The following principles appear to be deducible from the cases:

1. An agent who receives money for his principal is liable to third parties as regards such money so long as he stands in his original situation—i.e., so long as things remain unaltered between the agent and principal, and until there has been a change of circumstances, by his having paid over the money to his principal, or done something equivalent to it.
2. Upon the sale of an article by an agent if the thing sold turns out to be of less value than the price given for it, the extra price, in the absence of fraud or warranty cannot, as a general rule, be recovered back. But this rule is applicable only to cases when the thing sold is of an arbitrary value.
3. When a principal directs his agent to pay money over to a third party, the direction remains countermandable by the remitter until it is executed, either by the actual delivery of the chattel or the money to the remitee, or by some binding engagement entered into between the agent and the remitter, which gives the latter a right of action against the former: (Williams v. Everitt, sup., Scott v. Porcher, sup., Prind v. Hampshire, sup.).
4. An appropriation is not revocable when the principal remits money to the agent to be applied by the latter pursuant to a binding contract between the parties in discharge of a contingent liability: (Yates v. Hoppe.)
5. Money deposited with an agent, and expended by him in illegal disbursements cannot be recovered from him by the principal, if the principal was aware at the time of the illegal disbursements, or if he subsequently assented to them. Thus where the agent of a candidate at an election for a member of Parliament made extravagant outlays for the purpose of taking up the freedom of the voters, the candidate being aware of the object of the expenditure, cannot recover the excess: (Bayntun v. Catle, 1 Moo. & Rob. 255.)

LAW LIBRARY.

Cases in the Court of Referees 'decided during the Session 1876. Vol. 1, Part II. By F. CLIFFORD and A. G. RICKARDS, Esqrs, Barristers-at-Law. London: Butterworths.

We have looked through this second part of Vol. 1 of Clifford and Rickards' Reports, and can accord it nothing but praise, except in the indexing, which is still imperfect, as not giving the "specific" information wanted. It is voluminous, but, under some heads, gives only "generic" information. We know no better illustration than this book affords of the multiplicity and variety of interests with which Parliament has to deal, and with which it must be presumed it deals satisfactorily, as so little complaint is heard, a fact all the more wonderful when it is considered how impossible is uniformity of decision on the part of committees constituted as Parliamentary committees are. Perhaps this proves that honesty of purpose makes up for Procrustean uniformity. That this honesty extends to the locus standi court must be admitted, but it is rather a necessary incident of such a court that in an attempt to regulate practice by a series of precedents, a certain amount of narrowness and technicality should be engendered, and the study of this book of precedents leads to the conviction that the court is but narrowly steering clear of this danger. The function the court has to perform is to tell people, "You shall not even be heard to state your objections to a given measure, to which you say you object." This function is one of the most invidious that can fall to a judicial tribunal to perform; and the privilege of excluding petitioners ought, therefore, to be exercised with much caution. As the power now exists to grant costs against petitioners wantonly or vexatiously opposing, one of the principal reasons formerly existing for a rigid exercise of this function seems to have departed, and we think one may say that this feeling influences the court in some of its more recent decisions.

the several divisions of the High Court of Justice, and who can also administer oaths as well outside as within the London district.

We understand that Mr. George Shee, a member of the Bar, has been appointed to the office of registrar of the District Probate Registry at Canterbury, rendered vacant by the death of Mr. Thomas Godfrey Fanasett. These appointments are in the gift of the Lord Chancellor, who, we are afraid, may be expected to show a partiality for members of his own profession, over the claims of solicitors to appointments like the one in question. There can be no doubt that the Bar is continuing to monopolise all public appointments usually bestowed upon members of the legal profession.

SPECIMEN DIGEST OF THE LAW RELATING TO SOLICITORS OF THE SUPREME COURT.

CLAIMS LIABLE TO TAXATION.

WHEREVER an attorney or solicitor claims fees, charges, or disbursements, in right of something he has done whilst acting as solicitor or attorney, his bill is liable to be taxed:

6 & 7 Vict. c. 73.

Wherever an attorney or solicitor has made an agreement in writing with his client respecting the amount and manner of payment for the whole or any part of any past or future services, fees, charges, or disbursements, in respect of business done or to be done by such attorney or solicitor, whether as attorney or solicitor, or as an advocate or conveyancer, either by a gross sum or by commission or per centage, or by salary or otherwise, either at the same or at a greater or a less rate, as or than the rate at which he would otherwise be entitled to be remunerated:

33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, s. 4.

If after an order to refer a bill to a taxing master has been granted, the solicitor, after notice, omits to attend, the officer to whom such reference shall be made may proceed to tax and settle each bill and demand ex parte:

6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, 37.

In every case in which an attorney or solicitor has been or shall be employed to prosecute or oppose an inquiry whether a person is a lunatic, idiot, or of unsound mind, and incapable of managing himself or his affairs, or in or about any proceedings consequent upon such inquiry, and the costs of such attorney or solicitor have not been paid in the lifetime of such person, it shall be lawful for the Lord High Chancellor, or the Lord Justices, or others the persons or person intrusted by Her Majesty with the care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of persons found idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind, to make such and the like orders, and to exercise the like power and authority for taxation of and for raising and payment of such costs after the death of such person, as could or might have been exercised in his lifetime.

No such order shall be made but within six years after the right to recover accrues:

23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, s. 29.

REFERENCES BY THIRD PARTIES.

Whenever a third party shall be liable to pay, or being liable shall have paid, a taxable bill, the same reference and order shall be made, and the same course pursued in all respects as if the application was made by the party chargeable, provided, however, that in case an application is made, when a reference is not authorised to be made except under special circumstances, the court or judge to whom application is made, may take into consideration any additional special circumstances applicable to the person making such application, although such circumstances might not be applicable by party so chargeable with the bill.

6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37.

A solicitor cannot charge against a trust estate anything not necessary for the administration thereof, though expressly directed by the trustee. He must look for payment of such charges to the trustee personally.

Re Brown, L. Rep. 4 Eq. 464.

Persons who have no power to obtain an order:

1. A mere volunteer who, without liability, pays the bill.

Re Saunders, 13 L. J. 161, Ch.

Re Carver, 14 ib. 100;

2. Where a surveyor of highways, by virtue of his office, employs an attorney; the parishioners who contribute to the highway rate are too little interested in the payment of the bill to obtain an order referring it to taxation.

Re Barber, 14 M. & W. 720.

An outlaw cannot apply for such an order:

Re Ford, 1 B. & C. 88;

Young v. Walker, 16 M. & W. 446.

When once the bill has been taxed, no re-taxation will be allowed at the instance of a third party, unless under special circumstances approved of by the court:

6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 40.

TIME WITHIN WHICH TAXATION MUST BE MADE.

No reference of a bill of costs shall be directed upon an application made by the party chargeable with such a bill after verdict obtained, or writ of inquiry executed, or after the expiration of twelve months after such bill shall have been delivered, sent, or left, except under special circumstances, to be proved to the satisfaction of the court or judge to whom the application for the reference shall be made:

6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37.

The special circumstances to entitle a client to have the bill referred to taxation, may be matters appearing on the face of the bill, such as large and unusual charges, requiring explanation:

Re Robinson, L. Rep. 3 Ex. 4.

The mere existence of the relation of solicitor and client is not sufficient:

Ex parte Tower Subway Company, L. Rep. 16 Eq. 326.

POWER OF THE TAXING MASTER TO LIMIT CLAIMS OF SOLICITORS.

The master is in general the sole judge as to the reasonableness and propriety of the amount of the charges in a bill of costs before him:

Druce v. Scroope, 1 Dowl. 69;

Re Masters, ib. 18.

Where there is a special agreement (under 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23) by which the amount payable by the client is fixed, the amount stated is not to be paid until it has been allowed by the taxing master, who, if it shall appear to him that the agreement is not fair and reasonable, may require the opinion of a court or a judge to be taken thereon by motion or petition.

33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, s. 4.

He will ascertain and fix the rate of charge, and decide whether the business charged for was under the circumstances necessary.

Heald v. Hall, 2 D. P. C. 163;

Williams v. Nicholas, 1 Dowl. N. S. 840.

But he has no implied power

To examine viva voce.

Noy v. Reynolds, 2 A. & E. 461.

To certify whether a certain alleged transaction, not being an actual payment (the nature and circumstances of which were disputed), was or was not such a transaction as a court would have adjudged to constitute debt or a payment.

Re Smith, 9 Beav. 186.

Note.

Where the same solicitor is employed for two or more defendants, and separate answers are filed, or other proceedings had, by or for two or more such defendants separately, the taxing master shall consider, in the taxation of such solicitor's bill of costs, either between party and party, or between solicitor and client, whether such separate answers or other proceedings were necessary or proper; and if he is of opinion that any part of the costs occasioned thereby has been unnecessarily or improperly incurred, the same shall be disallowed.

Con. Ord. XL., r. 12.

ARTICLE 57.

TO ALLOW INTEREST.

The taxing master may allow interest at such rate and from such time as he thinks just on moneys disbursed by the attorney or solicitor for his client, and on moneys of the client in the hands of the attorney or solicitor, and improperly retained by him.

33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, s. 17.

Note.

The first part of this provision is intended to apply only as between a solicitor and his own client, and does not apply to a taxation of costs to be paid as between solicitor and client, out of a fund in court belonging wholly or partly to other persons than the client.

Hartland v. Murrell, L. Rep. 16 Eq. 285.

Upon the taxation of costs the taxing officer may, in determining the remuneration, if any, to be allowed to the attorney or solicitor for his services, have regard, subject to any general rules or orders hereafter to be made, to the skill, labour, and responsibility involved.

33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, s. 18.

ARTICLE 58.

APPEALS FROM DECISION OF TAXING MASTER.

An application to review taxation must be made by a summons in chambers, and cannot be made on motion.

Webster v. Masby, L. Rep. 4 Ch. 372.

The Court will rarely interfere to review a taxation upon a matter of discretion only. Proof must be given that the discretion has been improperly exercised, or that the master has made a plain and obvious error.

Illustrations.

Where the application to review has failed:—

1. Upon the taxation of a bill of costs relating to the re-investment of moneys in land, the master allowed a lump sum for surveyor's charges. This sum was the commission upon the purchase money, estimated according to a scale in use amongst surveyors.

Attorney-General v. Draper's Compagny, L. Rep. 9 Eq. 69.

2. Where the master exercised his discretion as to the expenses of witnesses, there being no plain and obvious error in his calculation.

Clarke v. Tyne Improvement Commissioners, L. Rep. 3 C. P. 230.

3. Where, in an action upon a policy of insurance, the master of taxation of the plaintiff's costs allowed ten shillings a day subsistence money to a witness for a period of eighteen months (from the issuing of the writ to the trial), the trial having been delayed by necessity.

Potter v. Rankin, L. Rep. 5 C. P. 518.

4. Where a judge's order allowed a "good jury" in an action against a railway company, and the master allowed for a special jury.

Vickers v. London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company, L. Rep. 5 C. P. 185.

5. Where additional fees were allowed to counsel upon additional papers being laid before them, although a judge in chambers thought that the latter contained no new matter.

Wakefield v. Brown, L. Rep. 9 C. P. 410.

6. Where the expenses of sending a barrister or commissioner to examine witnesses abroad was allowed.

Yglesias v. Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation, L. Rep. 5 C. P. 141.

Where the masters tax as personae designatae, and not as officers of the court, the court has no jurisdiction to review their taxation.

Illustration.

By a private Act a body of commissioners was constituted for the purpose of settling claims against a company. It was ordered that they might give certificates for costs, and that in case of difference such costs should, on the application of either party, be taxed and settled by a master of a Superior Court of law at Westminster, and that on production of the certificate judgment for the amount might be entered up, and execution issued thereon.

Re The Sheffield Waterworks Act 1834; Olliv's Claim, L. Rep. 1 Ex. 54.

So where the costs of an inquiry were settled by one of the masters of the Court of Queen's Bench, according to the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, s. 62, there being no proof of any improper exercise of discretion on the part of the master:

Queen v. London and North-Western Railway Company, L. Rep. 3 Q. B. 54.

Note.

If the master had improperly allowed costs to one of the parties where he was not entitled to them, or disallowed them where the party was entitled to them, the court would perhaps interfere by certiorari or mandamus.

ARTICLE 59.

THE ALLOCATOR.

Upon the completion of the taxation, the master gives his certificate of the final result (called the allocator). This is the property of the person in whose favour it is made.

Doc v. Robinson, 2 D. P. C. 503.

Note.

The master's decision will be reviewed only when he proceeded on wrong principles, and not merely as a question of amount:

Re Caslin, 18 Beav. 519.

If the allocator has been given, and the month has expired, proceedings may be taken upon the bill.

Note.

Mr. Justice Lush says: "The client has the option of proceeding by attachment upon the order to tax, which requires the attorney to refund the surplus; but the order containing in general no undertaking by the client to pay, the attorney in order to proceed in this way, must make the order and the master's allocator a rule of court, and then obtain a rule upon the client to pay the amount, and serve a copy thereof personally, and demand the amount in the usual way; or he may issue execution upon it. . . . He cannot proceed upon the order to tax."

The attorney cannot compel either the party or his attorney, or the town agent of the latter, on whom application the order for taxation has been made, to take up the allocator, or to pay him the costs of taking it up. If he wants it, he must take it up and pay the fees himself in the first instance.

COSTS OF TAXATION.

If the reference is made on the application of the party chargeable with the bill, or on the part of the attorney, or his representative, and the former attend on the taxation, the costs shall follow the event. That is, if the bill when taxed is less by a sixth part than the bill delivered, the attorney, his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall pay the costs, otherwise the party chargeable shall pay them.

6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37.

Where the taxation is granted only under special circumstances, for instance, after verdict or writ of inquiry, or after payment, or after twelve months have elapsed since the delivery of the bill, or where the master has certified specially any circumstances relating to the bill or taxation, the court or a judge make such order as it may think right respecting the payment of costs.

Ibid.

POWER OF REGISTRAR TO TAX.

The power of the registrar to tax costs is independent of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37. Hence he may tax a bill of costs without any special order, although more than twelve months have elapsed since its delivery.

Ex parte Blair, L. Rep. 5 Ch. 482.

A SOLICITOR MAY TAKE SECURITY FOR COSTS.

An attorney or solicitor may take security for his client for his future fees, charges, and disbursements to be ascertained by taxation or otherwise.

33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, s. 16.

The mere fact that a solicitor has money of his clients in hand when he makes a payment, does not prevent the payment being a disbursement by the solicitor so as to enable him to charge the amount in his bill.

If a client who is indebted to his solicitor intends to make a certain debt by payment through his solicitor, and not to pay to his credit in his account with the solicitor, he should make such an intention clearly understood.

Harrison v. Ward, 4 D. P. C. 39.

Woolson v. Hodgson, 2 D. P. C. 38.

Whenever any decree or order shall have been made for payment of costs in any suit, and such suit shall afterwards become abated, it shall be lawful for any person interested under such decree or order to revive such suit, and thereupon to prosecute and enforce such decree or order, and so on from time to time as often as any such abatement shall happen.

33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, s. 19.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

Saturday, March 24.

(Before Vice-Chancellor HALL.)

LLOYD v. SMITH.

Irregular proceedings in district registries.

THIS was an ordinary creditors' administration action, which had been commenced by a writ issued out of the Liverpool District Registrar's office, and in which the estate was insolvent.

Sutton appeared for the plaintiff.

Oswald for the defendants.

HALL, V.C., said he had directed this case to be put into the paper again, because difficulties had arisen in drawing up the order. A decree had been referred to, dated the 6th May 1876, ordering the accounts to be taken before the district registrar. No such decree, however, could be found, and unless there was some decree by the judge, or some explanation given, the taking the accounts by the district registrar was wholly irregular. But not only had the accounts been taken, apparently without any direction, but a sale had been ordered and a receiver appointed, and money had been received by the so-called receiver, and paid probably into some bank, but his Lordship did not know what, and all this without the slightest authority to do anything of the kind; for it was, on the contrary, expressly provided in the Act and Rules that the district registrars should only have the powers of masters, and that they should not have any power to appoint receivers. His Lordship then ordered the matter to stand over to the first Saturday in the next sittings, and said that unless it could be shown that some decree had been made to have the accounts and inquiries taken by the district registrar, he should send the action into his chambers, and have the accounts and inquiries commenced de novo. His Lordship would adopt those that had been taken as far as he could, but would not do that on a future occasion, as this was not the first time he had been asked to take this course, and it would never do to allow such a practice to grow up. But, even if there had been an order as to the accounts, his Lordship desired to express a strong opinion that all the other proceedings had been most irregular and improper.

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE COCKBURN AND THE WESTERN CIRCUIT.

COCKBURN, C.J., was on Monday presented with addresses by the Mayor and Corporation of Bristol, and by the Incorporated Law Society of that city.

His Lordship was formerly a member of the Western Circuit Bar and Recorder of Bristol, and revisiting that city after a lapse of upwards of twenty years, the occasion was deemed a fitting one to offer his Lordship certain congratulations. At the conclusion of the business of the assize for the day, the Mayor and Corporation went in a body to the Nisi Prius Court, in which his Lordship was sitting, and the Mayor read an address congratulating his Lordship upon his first official visit to Bristol as Lord Chief Justice of England, and rejoicing in the health and vigour of intellect with which Providence had blessed him.

COCKBURN, C.J. in responding, said the Corporation of that ancient city had been pleased to refer to his judicial career in terms of commendation, which were to him of a most gratifying character. It only showed—and let all those who came after him know it—that, whatever might be the shortcomings of the individual in the performance of judicial duties, an honest, faithful, and fearless discharge of those duties would ever meet with a generous and intelligent appreciation at the hands of an enlightened and intelligent public.

Mr. Vaassall, President of the Bristol Incorporated Law Society, then presented an address, expressing great admiration not only for the eminent manner in which his Lordship had discharged the duties of Lord Chief Justice of England, but also for the high and manly tone by which his Lordship's forensic and judicial career had been rendered illustrious. (Applause.) It also referred with grateful satisfaction to his Lordship's noble and patriotic conduct on the occasion of the settlement of the Alabama claims, when he so ably upheld the dignity and honour of the Queen and country. (Applause.)

COCKBURN, C.J., in responding, said it had ever been his most anxious effort, both as a member of the Bar and the Bench, to uphold the honour, the dignity, and integrity of the Profession. He always thought as a member of the Bar that he might do his duty to the client without unduly sacrificing and compromising the principles of truth and justice, and that was the principle on which advocacy ought to be conducted. (Applause.)

Mr. Cole, Q.C., M.P., the leader of the Western Circuit Bar, also addressed his Lordship in congratulatory terms, expressing the pleasure which the Bar experienced at his revisiting his old circuit, the scene of his former triumphs. And not only so, but they rejoiced to see him in the full and ripe possession of all those varied talents which they all so appreciated. (Applause.) He trusted his Lordship would be long spared to occupy a seat on the Bench of which he had been for so long so distinguished an ornament. His name would ever be revered on that circuit, both as an advocate and as a judge, and let him say, as a man. (Loud applause.)

COCKBURN, C.J., who was much moved, said he could not trust himself to answer the very touching language just addressed to him. He came back to his old circuit thinking the time was come when, if he meant to visit it again, he ought to do so. He would not willingly have left the Bench without coming down to the old Western Circuit once more. He felt that he had something of the sound of the trumpet still left in him, and that he was able to do his duty as well as ever he could do it in his life. (Applause.) But, be that as it might, whether he was destined to last very much longer or not, the addresses which had been made to him that day made him feel that he had not lived in vain. (Applause.)

The court was densely crowded, and his Lordship was warmly cheered.

BIRMINGHAM LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

ON Tuesday evening last the above society held its 603rd ordinary meeting in the Library rooms of the Birmingham Law Society, H. W. Stanbury, Esq., presiding. A debate took place on the following question, "Is an action maintainable for maliciously causing and procuring one of two contracting parties not to perform the contract, whereby loss accrued to the other?" Messrs. Cresswell and Bayley supported the affirmative side, and Mr. Deakin the negative. The voting was in favour of the affirmative by a small majority. A vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the meeting.

BOLTON ARTICLED CLERKS' SOCIETY.

THE society held a meeting on Wednesday evening, the 28th Feb. last, at the Bolton Law Society's Rooms, Wood-street, when Jas. Watkins, Esq., the president, occupied the chair. R. Pennington, Esq., B.A., LL.B., one of the vice-presidents of the society, read a paper on "The Influence of the Roman Law on the English Common Law," which was found very interesting and instructive by the members.

DEWSBURY, WAKEFIELD, AND DISTRICT LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

THE first ordinary meeting for discussion of this society was held on Thursday evening, the 15th inst., when the following moot point was discussed: "A devise is made to the use of A., a bachelor, for life, and after his decease to the use of his eldest son for life, and after the decease of both of them to the use of the eldest son of that son, if born in the lifetime of A., in fee. Is this last limitation valid and effectual to vest the fee in the grandson born in the lifetime of the grandfather, subject to the life estates of the father and son?"

Mr. J. H. Parker, solicitor, presided. Mr. Lister and Mr. J. Sykes supported the affirmative, and Mr. L. B. Walker and Mr. Baldwin the negative, after which (several gentlemen having taken part in the debate) the chairman summed up the arguments and put the question to the meeting, when it was negatived by a large majority. A vote of thanks to the chairman for his kindness in presiding closed the proceedings.

HUDDERSFIELD LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

A GENERAL meeting of this society was held on Monday evening last, at the County Court, Quaker-street, Mr. B. Crook, solicitor, in the chair. There was an unusually large attendance of members of the society. The provisions of 39 & 40 Vict. c. 77 (Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act 1876) were explained by Mr. D. F. E. Sykes, and were afterwards discussed by the members. The chairman then called upon Mr. J. R. Haigh to move the proposition "That it is desirable to abolish capital punishment." Mr. Haigh was supported by Mr. R. T. Ruddock, and opposed by Messrs. J. W. Piercy and J. J. Booth. The proposition underwent thorough consideration, and was eventually negatived by a majority of two votes.

Mr. F. Sykes, from the office of Mr. J. J. Miles, was elected an ordinary member of the society.

MANCHESTER LAW STUDENTS' DEBATING SOCIETY.

THE ninth ordinary meeting of this session was held on the 20th March inst., at Cross-street Chambers, Cross-street. Charles James Fleming, Esq., barrister-at-law, presided. The following were the members present: Messrs. Hill, Hardman, Nadin, W. Slater, Williams, Atkins, Miller, Bullough, James Simpson, Hampson, Lawson, Jones, Hialop, Etheredge, Higham, E. Hewitt, Flower, the secretary and a friend. The minutes of the previous meeting having been duly read and confirmed, Mr. Nadin opened the evening's discussion upon the subject appointed, which was as follows: "Ought sect. 5 of the Debtors' Act 1869 to be repealed?" (This section introduced an exception to the abolition of imprisonment for debt effected by previous clauses, by giving power to a judge to commit a defaulting debtor for a period not exceeding six weeks for any sum not exceeding £50.) He contended that a man ought not to be imprisoned for the mere inability to fulfil a civil contract, and contrasted the law of Scotland with our law on this point. Mr. Higham for the negative, referring to the subsequent clause in the Act whereby proof of ability was rendered a condition precedent to commitment, argued that a debtor who, either through neglect or contumacy, had not made payment, ought to suffer the consequences. Mr. Hardman submitted, in support of the affirmative, that the Act as at present constituted, weighed disproportionately heavy on the poor man, inasmuch as the man who was able to contract debts beyond £50 could take the benefit of the Bankruptcy Act, and so escape imprisonment. Mr. Hialop, on behalf of the negative, thought that the abolition of imprisonment for debt would certainly injure credit, and asked what remedy there would be against the man who had parted with all his property to defeat expected execution? Messrs. Simpson, Lawson (solicitor), Hill, and Atkins having addressed the meeting, the chairman traced the history of the bankruptcy law from its first establishment, and stated that the object of succeeding legislation had been gradually to eliminate all harsh features, and considered that the man who could not pay 20s. in the pound was to be considered an unfortunate man and an object of sympathy, unless and until fraud was proved against him; and urged the repeal of the excepting section, and the substitution of a simple County Court proceeding whereby, without the formalities of a liquidation, a man whose indebtedness did not reach £50 might be able to get rid of his liabilities by an equitable distribution of his property amongst all his creditors. The learned chairman concluded with an eloquent denunciation of what is termed the "aristocracy of insolvency," and expressed his opinion that the evil could be got rid of by the means he had suggested. On the proposition of Mr. Nadin, seconded by the secretary, the meeting tendered to the learned chairman its best thanks for his able presidency, for which the latter returned his acknowledgments, and the members separated.

NOTTINGHAM LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

AN ordinary meeting of this society was held at the Grand Jury Room, Town Hall, Nottingham, on Friday evening, the 23rd March, H. Wyles, Esq., in the chair. The question for the evening's discussion was: "That the unanimity required in juries is prejudicial to the attainment of justice." Messrs. S. E. Heath and A. J. Stevenson supported the affirmative, and Messrs. S. G.

Warner and F. M. Burton, B.A., the negative. All the members of the society who were present expressed their opinions, most of them inclining to the negative view of the question. After the chairman had summed up, the question was put to the vote and decided unanimously in the negative. There were fourteen members present at the meeting.

Two new members were elected—one honorary and one ordinary member.

PLYMOUTH, STONEHOUSE, AND DEVONPORT LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

A MEETING of this society was held at the Athenaeum, Plymouth, on the 23rd inst., W. Adams, Esq., in the chair. Mr. C. C. Gill was proposed for election as an ordinary member by Mr. C. Matthews, seconded by Mr. Helpman, and on a show of hands being taken he was declared to be unanimously elected. This election makes a total of eleven ordinary members who have joined the society during the present session. The chairman then announced that the subject for discussion at the next meeting would be as follows: "That the present right of action for breach of promise of marriage ought to be abolished?" In the absence of Mr. E. F. Fox, Mr. Walker brought forward the subject for discussion for the evening, "That the landed estates of a person who dies intestate ought to be divided amongst his next of kin, and not as at present given to his eldest son or heir?" Mr. Harrison and Mr. Stephens opposing; Messrs. Guy, Helpman, Symons, and Caunter also spoke on the subject. After the summing up of the chairman the question was put to the vote and decided in the negative by a majority of two votes.

UNITED LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

THIS society met at the Law Institution on Monday evening, the 26th inst., for the discussion of the following legal question: "Is an agreement made by a jeme sole to sell her separate estate binding upon her after marriage?" Mr. S. Ward opened the discussion, and in the end the affirmative of the motion was carried.

The ordinary weekly meeting was held at Clements' Inn Hall, Strand, on Wednesday evening, the 28th inst., when the following motion formed the subject for discussion: "That it is the Duty of the State to encourage Emigration."

Upwards of £50 has up to the present time been subscribed towards the circulating law library, in addition to which many valuable law books have been presented.

WOLVERHAMPTON LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

At a meeting held in the Law Library on Thursday evening, March 22, John Neve, Esq., in the chair, the following subject was discussed: "That it is desirable to assimilate the law of personal and real property in cases of intestacy." Mr. Cresswell opened the debate in favour of the proposition, and was supported by Messrs. Andrews and Clayton. Mr. A. B. Smith opposed, and was supported by Messrs. A. F. Walker and Langley. After very able summing up by the chairman, the proposition was put to the meeting, and lost by a majority of one. A hearty vote of thanks to the chairman terminated the proceedings.

Queries.

INTERMEDIATE.—(1) Should a candidate at the intermediate examination be unsuccessful, and desire to present himself again, is permission necessary, and what notice must be given if the examination he proposes to attend be after the expiration of six months after the expiration of one half of the term of his articles (assuming the examination he presented himself at was within the six months)? (2) What percentage of marks is sufficient for a pass at the intermediate examination? (3) If the candidate be below the percentage in one subject but above it in another at such examination will he be passed? (4) Within what time after the examination is the result made known to him?

LEGIS.—(1) See General Regulations issued by the judges in November, 1875, under the authority of the Judicature Act. (2) We are not aware that any fixed rule of the kind obtains. (3) The success of a candidate depends upon the general character of his answers to the several questions. (4) About a fortnight usually.—Ed.]

—I was articled 15th October, 1875, for five years; when is the earliest time I can present myself for my intermediate examination?

[April, 1878.—Ed.]

—When can I go up for my intermediate examination? I was articled for five years on 5th August, 1875.

[April, 1878.—Ed.]

FINAL EXAMINATION.—My articles expire on the 15th January, 1878: when is the earliest time at which I can present myself for the final?

E. E. [Read for yourself the information published by us almost weekly in our "Law Students' Journal" columns, for the very purpose of furnishing answers to such inquiries.—Ed.]

EXAMINATIONS.—I was articled for five years on the 1st July, 1875: when will be my earliest opportunity to present myself for the intermediate and final examinations?

C. H. C. [(1) January, 1878. (2) June, 1880.—Ed.]

BAR STUDENTS.—I am at present with a solicitor learning the routine previously to becoming a student for the bar. Will it be necessary for me to retire from the solicitor's office before I can present myself for the preliminary examination; and if, after passing, there is any limited time within which I must be introduced as a student, and particularly what book, or the best place, to obtain the fullest information with regard to students for the bar?

DUBITAS.

[Your query might have been made more intelligible. There is no objection to your going up for the preliminary bar examination while in a solicitor's office, but you cannot be admitted as a student while so engaged. Having passed the preliminary you can be entered as a student at any time. For further information inquire of the treasurer of your proposed inn.—Ed.]

ARTICLES OF CLERKSHIP—FRESH ARTICLES—STAMP DUTY.—In articles of clerkship a proviso is inserted that if clerk should elect to put an end to his articles any time during the term, the solicitor should return a proportionate part of premium for unexpired portion of the term. The clerk wishes to annul the articles under such proviso, and serve the remainder of his term with another solicitor. Would he be obliged to pay a further stamp duty of £80 on entering into fresh articles; or would any, and what allowance be made in respect of the duty on the original articles?

AN ARTICLED CLERK.

[An assignment of articles, with a 10s. stamp, would seem to be the proper course to take in such a case.—Ed.]

SERVICE UNDER ARTICLES—APPOINTMENT HELD BY ARTICLED CLERK.—I have served the whole term of five years well and faithfully under articles. Will my appointment as a relieving officer in any way prejudice my entering the legal profession in passing the final examination?

LEX.

[No, not if you did not hold the appointment during articles; but such an office is not compatible with the dignity of the profession.—Ed.]

ARTICLES—UNIVERSITY DEGREE—SHORTENING TERM OF SERVICE.—Will you inform me if an articled clerk to a solicitor for five years can, at the expiration of three years, leave his articleship and proceed to take a University degree, without having afterwards to serve the remaining two years of the articles with the solicitor? If this is not allowed, will you please state your opinion on the case, whether it would be advantageous or not.

[You cannot do so. The degree, to be available, must be taken before entering into articles of clerkship. We cannot approve of an interruption to articles such as that involved in your idea; but, we think that when such a degree can be taken without residence, that if taken without interruption to articles, provision should be made for rendering unnecessary service for the last two out of the five years of the service under articles.—Ed.]

TIME FOR STAMPING ARTICLES.—Does sect. 43 of the Stamp Act 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 97) mean that articles of clerkship can be stamped within six months after execution without a penalty? If not what does it mean?

L. H.

[The Commissioners of Inland Revenue contend that articles of clerkship cannot be stamped after execution, except upon payment of the full penalty.—Ed.]

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

JURISDICTION—OCCUPATION OF PREMISES ABROAD—FOREIGN GOVERNMENT—DOMICIL.—The plaintiff and defendant companies were proprietors of lines of railway in a foreign state and of offices in this country. The plaintiffs sued for the use and occupation of their station in the foreign State by the defendants, who stated in defence that the two companies were both concessionaires of the foreign State, that the station was built upon land granted by that State, and that by the express provisions of the laws of that State powers of adjusting all rights arising out of the respective claims of the two companies were vested in the government of that State: Held, upon demurrer, that there was nothing in these allegations of the defendants to oust the jurisdiction of the courts of this country: (Buenos Ayres Railway Company (Limited) v. Northern Railway of Buenos Ayres Company (Limited), 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 118. Q.B. Div.)

MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT—AMENDED TERMS—SIGNATURE OF MINUTES.—Plaintiffs, the managers of defendants' docks, were negotiating for the continuance of their employment after the end of their existing arrangement, and duplicate drafts of terms proposed were in the possession of the plaintiffs' and defendants' solicitor. Upon plaintiffs' objection, some alterations in the terms were embodied in a paper written by a director of the defendants' company authorised to treat with plaintiffs on the subject; the paper concluded "All other provisions as to draft." The plaintiffs verbally accepted these altered terms, and defendants' solicitor made alterations in his draft, but, by mistake, they were not in accordance with the paper to which plaintiffs had agreed. The solicitor endorsed upon this draft thus amended the words, "Resolved that the draft agreement with Messrs. Jones Brothers be approved and engrossed in duplicate, and that the seal of the company be affixed thereto." This was signed by the chairman of the board, who also wrote the date, and the words "carried unanimously." A similar resolution was entered in the minute book, and signed by the chairman in the same way at the next meeting, the director who had drawn up the paper agreed to being present at both meetings. When plaintiffs came to execute the deed engrossed from the solicitor's amended draft, they objected to the terms which differed from the paper mentioned, and the board resolved to break off further negotiations with them. Held, in an action for damages in respect of plaintiffs' wrongful dismissal by the defendants, that under these circumstances there was a sufficient memorandum of the new agreement within the Statute of Frauds: (Jones v. Victoria Graving Dock Company Limited, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 144. Q.B. Div.)

REAL PROPERTY AND CONVEYANCING.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT—POLICY OF ASSURANCE—BREACH OF TRUST.—By a marriage settlement, made in 1846, a policy of assurance on the life of K., the husband, was assigned to two trustees C. and J., the husband covenanting to keep up the policy. J. was unaware of his having been appointed a trustee, and on becoming aware of it, in 1872, disclaimed. C. gave no notice of the settlement to the assurance society, and did not indorse on the policy any memorandum of the settlement. In 1854 C. purported to appoint W. sole trustee of the settlement, and handed over the policy to him. W. allowed K. to get possession of the policy, and K., after receiving a bonus on it, mortgaged it, and the mortgagee subsequently surrendered it to the assurance society. There were no funds available for keeping up the policy, and K. had been in straitened circumstances for some time previous to the mortgage. He died in 1869. In the view of the court C. was aware when he handed over the policy to W. that a breach of trust was contemplated. Held, that C. and W. were jointly and severally liable (W. primarily as between themselves) for the sum received on the surrender of the policy, and for that received by K. on account of the bonus, with compound interest at 4 per cent. from the dates when these sums were respectively received, until the date of K.'s death, and simple interest thereon forward up to the date of the account. (Hobday v. Peters (28 Beav. 603), distinguished: (Kingdon v. Castleman, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 141. Chan. Div.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—ANTE-NUPTIAL AGREEMENT BY HUSBAND TO SETTLE WIFE'S REAL ESTATE.—By an ante-nuptial agreement, signed by the intended husband and wife, and the father and mother of the intended wife, the father and mother agreed to appoint a share of certain real estate (which stood limited to the father for life, with remainder to the mother for life, with remainder to their children as the survivor of them should appoint, and in default of appointment to their children equally) to the intended wife, and the intended husband agreed that he would settle such share upon trusts in favour of himself and his wife and their children. The wife's father, having survived her mother, released his power of appointment, and the wife, therefore, became entitled to a share of the property in default of appointment. The wife died in the lifetime of her father, leaving her husband and two children, and before any settlement had been made. On an action by the husband and the younger of his children against his elder child, who was his wife's heir-at-law, for specific performance of the agreement: Held, that the agreement was binding on the wife's share and on her heir-at-law, and specific performance thereof decreed: (Lee v. Lee, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 138. Chan. Div.)

WILL—CONSTRUCTION—"OTHER DAUGHTERS SURVIVING."—A testator devised his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale, and upon trust to divide the residue of the moneys so arising among all such of his daughters as should be living at his death; and the trustees were directed to invest the share of each daughter and pay the income to her for life with remainder to her children, and remainder in default of issue to the testator's "other daughters or other daughter surviving." All the daughters survived the testator. One died subsequently leaving a child, and afterwards another died without issue. Held (reversing the decision of Hall, V.C.), that the period of survivorship referred to the death of the daughter whose share was to be distributed, and that the child of the daughter who died first took no interest in the share of the daughter who subsequently died without issue: (Beckwith v. Beckwith, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 123. Ct. of App.)

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

BURNLEY COUNTY COURT.

Thursday, Jan. 11.

(Before W. T. S. DANIEL, Esq., Q.C., Judge.)

Re W. A. MATHER.

Bankruptcy—Proof—Deduction of credits—Moneys in hands of creditor—Fraud.

HIS HONOUR said: In this case, which was heard before me at the last court, there were two motions, one by the Padiham Spinning Company, seeking to reverse the decision of the trustee, by which he rejected in toto the proof made by the company, claiming to prove for £124 16s. It appeared to me, on the hearing, that the total rejection of the proof was unjustifiable, and in fact when the case was opened the learned counsel who appeared for the trustee admitted that, at all events, proof to the extent of £124 16s. should be admitted, and accordingly I made an order on the motion of the Padiham Spinning Company in their favour, and ordered the costs to be paid by the trustee. The object of the trustee was plain enough, namely, to question the right of the Spinning Company to deduct from their debt certain credits which appeared upon the face of their proof, the trustee claiming the right to treat those credits as moneys still in the hands of the Padiham Spinning Company, and forming part of the estate of the debtor. The proper course would have been to admit the proof subject to that right, and not reject the proof in toto, and thus put the estate to the expense of a hostile motion by the company. I therefore disposed of that motion at the time, by ordering that the proof be admitted for £124 16s., and that the costs be paid to the company. With reference to the other motion, that was a motion by the trustee by which he seeks to recover from the Padiham Spinning Company two sums of £9 12s. and £165, as part of the estate of the debtor in their hands, under circumstances which I am about to state, and the company claim the right to retain those sums under the mutual credit clause. They insist that those sums were paid to them as cash. They were creditors of Mather, the debtor, for the sum of £301 8s., they were entitled to retain those sums, and treat them as items in account to be stated upon the principle of the mutual credit clause of the Bankruptcy Act. The question is, are they so entitled? The circumstances of this case are special, and require to be carefully stated and considered upon the evidence. I should here state that, in support of the trustee's motion, there was at first nothing but an affidavit made by the debtor's solicitor, stating facts upon information and belief. Such an affidavit as that could not be read as evidence, and the costs of that affidavit ought not to be allowed out of the estate, being good for no purpose whatever as evidence on an adverse motion. But it appearing that the trustee had given a proper notice to examine the debtor viva voce before the court, upon the hearing, he was examined accordingly, and it is upon his evidence so given that the judgment of the court must proceed. He was examined before me, and the facts which are not really in dispute are in substance as follows: He carried on the business of a cloth manufacturer at Walverden Mill, near Colne. He became largely indebted to his Manchester agents for moneys which they had advanced to him for the purpose of his business, and they were his creditors to the extent of about £3000, his total debts being between £8000 and £9000. Mather had a dispute with his landlord with reference to the terms upon which he occupied the mill. There had been some arrangement for a lease, and disputes had arisen between Mather and the landlord, and those disputes created difficulties which Mather hoped, in the result, would turn out only to be temporary. But in fact, as he stated, on the 29th Aug. last, he found himself to be insolvent, that is to say he was not able to pay all his creditors their debts as they became due in the ordinary course. He communicated with his agents at Manchester, and some of his other creditors, including the Padiham Spinning Company, and communicated the fact to them that he was insolvent, and at once proposed to pay them a composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound. This the Manchester agents were willing to have accepted if the other creditors of Mather would have done the same. Some of them declined to accept the composition, and amongst them the Padiham Spinning Company. Of course, therefore, that proposal for a composition was inoperative. The state of insolvency continuing, but hoping, as he alleged, to be able to make an arrangement with the landlord, by means of which he should be able to carry on his business, so as to justify him in offering a higher composition, he convened by circular a meeting of his creditors on the 1st Sept., and he again offered them at that meeting a composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound. The Padiham Company attended that meeting, represented by their manager and agent, Ainsworth. The result of the meeting was that the composition was not accepted, but a committee of the creditors was appointed for the purpose of investigating Mather's books and accounts, and seeing the state of affairs at his mill, and to the appointment of that committee the Padiham Spinning Company, through Ainsworth, were an assenting party. The committee examined and looked into the affairs, and a further meeting was held on the 5th Sept., at which Ainsworth, as representing the Padiham Spinning Company was present, and a composition of 9s. in the pound was then offered, and there was a general willingness to accept the composition, if Mather could complete with his landlord some arrangement which he anticipated he should be able to complete. In the meantime the mill was to be kept in working order, and carried on to complete existing orders, and for that purpose it was necessary that material should be supplied in order to keep the mill going, and it was by keeping the mill going that the expectation was justified of Mather being able to pay the composition of 9s. in the pound. It appeared that at that time a distress was put in by the landlord for £700, but that was arranged, and a forced sale under the distress was avoided. The Manchester agents, who were the largest creditors, were willing to assist Mather to enable him to work out his means of paying the larger composition if he should be able to do so. It appears that there was a considerable quantity of manufactured cloth at the mill, which was ready to be sent to Manchester for sale—the extent of upwards of £600, and this was sent from the mill to Manchester, to the agents there to sell. Of course the agents were bound to act in good faith towards the other creditors with whom they had then placed themselves in communication, and upon receiving this amount of cloth, instead of carrying it to the credit of their account, which was upwards of £5000, they paid Mather £600 in order to enable him to procure raw material with which to carry on the business at the mill. It appears, upon Mather's evidence that having received, or expecting to receive this sum of money from the Manchester agents he communicated with the Padiham Mill Company, and on the 15th Sept. he, with the means then at his disposal, paid the Padiham Mill Company the sum of £84, upon condition that they should supply him with a load of yarn to about the value of that sum, on the following day, in order that the mill might be carried on as a going concern. Accordingly, on the 14th Sept. Mather paid to Ainsworth £84, and took from him this receipt:—"Received from Mr. Mather the sum of £84 for yarn, to be delivered to-morrow, Sept. 14th, 1876." And then that is signed by Ainsworth for the Padiham Spinning Company. The company, in good faith, delivered a load of yarn on the following morning. The yarn which was so delivered on the following morning was not of the value of £84, but of the value of £74 8s. Ainsworth said that Mather paid £84 upon the promise of their supplying him with a load of yarn on the following morning to the value of £84. The whole load of yarn sent on the following morning turned out to be not quite £84 worth, but of the value of £74 8s. only. That transaction I consider to have been a transaction which on both sides was conducted in good faith, and as the debtor had not then committed any act of bankruptcy available for adjudication, it amounted to a mutual dealing within the meaning of the statute, and the Spinning Company would be entitled to retain the £9 12s., and treat it as an item in account, being the result of a mutual dealing conducted bona fide on both sides. With reference to the £165, which is the other sum, the trustee claims that stands on a totally different footing as regards the Mill Company. Having received the yarn on the morning of the 14th Sept., and finding more would be required for the immediate purposes of the mill, Mather went to Manchester on the following day, the 15th, and he there saw three persons, or the representatives of three firms, from whom he was anxious to obtain material for the purpose of working the mill. He saw the representative of the Sun Mill Company, and the representative of another firm of the name of Marriott, from whom he procured yarn (they were creditors) for the purpose of enabling the business of the mill to be carried on, and to whom he paid ready money upon the faith of the yarn being afterwards supplied, and it was so supplied by those firms. At the same time, on the same occasion, but not in the presence of those two other parties to whom I have referred, he saw each separately, he saw Ainsworth, and said to him, "Now I shall want some more yarn," at least "two more loads, and I have £165 which I will pay you upon the condition of your supplying me with those two loads, one to be sent to-morrow morning, the 16th, the other to be sent on Tuesday, the 19th." The object of the arrangement, bona fide as regards the debtor, was that the Spinning Company should by means of the money that Mather paid them, not decrease his debt to them, but that he should be enabled to procure by means of the money so paid goods to the value of the money paid, for the purpose of carrying on the mill profitably, keeping it in good working order, so that the contemplated composition of 9s. in the pound might be paid by Mather. Ainsworth, who represented the Padiham Mill Company, and by whose act they must be treated as bound, knew perfectly well that Mather was not in a position to pay £165 to them as a part payment in respect of their debt of £300. They knew Mather to be insolvent, and any payment made by Mather towards the reduction of their debt, without receiving value, would have been a fraudulent preference, and absolutely void. The Padiham Company, through Ainsworth, must have known that. The specific object of the payment of the £165 was proved beyond all doubt or cavil by the receipt which Ainsworth gave, which receipt is now lying before me, dated the 15th Sept. 1876, and is as follows:—"Received from Mr. Mather £165 on account of yarn, to be delivered." It does not say, "On account of two loads of yarn, one to be delivered to-morrow, and the other on Tuesday, the 19th," but it says, "Received on account of yarn to be delivered." It is quite open to me to supplement that receipt by the evidence of Mather. Ainsworth was also examined. A few questions were put to him, but none questioning the accuracy of Mather's statement. The yarn to be delivered was to be delivered in two loads, one on the following morning, and the other on the following Tuesday, the 19th, and the £165 was calculated to represent about the value of the two yarn. The other load of yarn to be delivered on the former date was expected to be about 150 lbs., but was found out to be of the value 8s., and these loads were not exactly as to quantity or cost, and the £165 was intended to represent the value of the yarn which Mather had contracted with them to deliver, and which they had contracted with the mill to deliver in return for the £165. Now, this fact appears in the examination of Mather, except it as entirely true. Ainsworth did not contradict it—namely, that Mather having delivered to Ainsworth for the delivery of the yarn, as the condition upon which he had the £165, wanting one load the following morning, stipulated with Ainsworth that it should be delivered; and as they were then at Manchester and Mather knew that the necessities of the mill would require that a load of yarn should be delivered on the following morning (Saturday), suggested to Ainsworth that he should deliver it at once from Manchester, to the mill at 10 o'clock, to have a load of yarn ready by the morning, and Mather actually paid for it a shilling for the telegram. It was suggested by Ainsworth that a telegram was sent, and that the Padiham Mill Company received that telegram, and I assume it, and therefore the company would know they received the £165 from Ainsworth, and had been received by him upon the express condition of delivering yarn. Ainsworth comes on the 15th, and according to his evidence, the directors having received the £165 from him, a resolution the same evening that they pay the £165 and not send the yarn. Now, the question is, whether they are entitled to that way with the money received? On the 16th of it, it was as gross a fraud as could be committed, and unless there be some disability in the law which would protect a person of this nature, it ought not to be upheld by a court of justice. The directors adhered to the resolution and did not send the yarn. It is not coming to the mill on the Saturday, as Mather expected, and had a right to expect, he went over to Padiham on the Saturday, and about it. But the directors were not at least he did not see them—and Ainsworth was not there, but he saw the bookkeeper, and he said he had come for some yarn. The bookkeeper, who seemed to be aware of the resolution of the directors, said: "Oh, are you Mather's man?" He said, "Yes, I have come to get a load of yarn which should have been delivered this morning." The reply received was that they would have no yarn. Mather then came on the 17th, which was the proper one, and on the Monday to the Padiham Spinning Company demanding the delivery of the two loads of yarn or the return of his money. They never replied to that letter or sent any yarn. A negotiation between Mather and his landlady having resulted so beneficially to him as he hoped it would have done, and finding thus unable to deal with his creditors in any way in which he was desirous of dealing with them, on the 21st Sept. filed his petition for liquidation in this court, and the question now to decide is, whether the Padiham Spinning Company, having through their agent received this £165 from Mather, on the express condition that they should deliver to him two loads of yarn, and not having complied with that condition, can they retain the money as against Mather, and keep it as a part payment of the debt? I am of opinion they cannot. Questions of this sort have generally arisen in cases where there was a delivery of specific goods or a loan of money, which could be the subject of an action, in which form of action being in tort, a debt could not be pleaded, as in Kay v. Flint (21) and Buchanan v. Finlay (9 B. H. 1). The authority chiefly relied upon by the plaintiff for the trustee. Where there is a specific delivery of chattels, bills, or goods—specific goods of a specific purpose, the party to whom they are delivered does not acquire a property in those goods, but the specific purpose for which they were delivered is not answered, and, therefore, the party to whom they are delivered may recover in an action of debt upon the ground that the property in the goods has not passed, and the conversion is complete; and the cases also show that where by fraud the goods have been converted, as in Buchanan v. Finlay, where the goods were retained by the parties to whom they had been sent for a specific purpose until they arrived at maturity, and the moneys due were then received, there being the right to convert in trover, if the parties chose to convert the money they were entitled to do so, and were not liable to a right of set off. I do not think the case in which the question has arisen in the original transaction has been a payment of money, not a delivery of goods. It is contended that the same principle would not apply, where money is paid in cash, as this £165 was paid, not in any form which could be recovered specifically in trover, as by cheque, but simply in notes, gold, or cash, the property in the cash so paid would vest in the person to whom payment was made, and, therefore, the case would ordinarily be dealt with under the mutual credit clause. But, admitting that there is no authority applicable to the ordinary case of payment of money which is claimed to be made the subject of credit, there are in this case special circumstances which justify me in holding that the mutual credit clause cannot apply to this £165, because it would be enabling the Padiham Spinning Company to commit a fraud upon the other creditors, which the debtor himself could not have committed with impunity. The company knew that he was insolvent. They knew the purpose for which this yarn was required, namely, to enable him to carry on the mill as a going concern, with a view to the interests of the general body of creditors, in order to enable the debtor to make good the proposal to pay a composition of 9s. in the pound. They knew that the £165 was money in the hands of the debtor, which he could not, without committing a fraud upon other creditors, pay to them in reduction of their original debt, and I am of opinion that a payment made under such circumstances is so impressed with a trust that the party who receives it cannot himself, by appropriating it to an existing account, under the mutual credit clause, defeat the trust, and thereby enable himself to pay himself a debt which the debtor himself was not able to pay. I think, therefore, that in this case the £165 is a sum which the Padiham Spinning Company were bound to have returned to Mather on the Monday, when he demanded it. If they still refused to deliver the two loads of yarn, he could have recovered, and the right of action which he had then is now vested in the trustee, and the trustee is entitled to recover. I am aware that the decision involves a proposition for which I am bound to say I do not find any distinct authority, but I think the reason, as well as the common sense, of the case justifies it. Suppose Mather had not been insolvent. Mather might have brought an action to recover this £165, as money which had been paid for a consideration which had entirely failed. In such an action as that under ordinary circumstances, no doubt, a set-off could have been pleaded, but there now being insolvency, the set-off can only be established by permitting the spinning company to commit a fraud by taking advantage of their own wrong in refusing to perform the condition upon which the money had been paid. This would be making the statutory right of mutual credit a means of fraud, which, I think, cannot be done, and this £165 must, therefore, be returned by the company. As I have said, I think there was a bond fide mutual dealing between the debtor and the spinning company in reference to the payment of £84, which was paid as consideration for a load of yarn to be sent on the following day. The load of yarn was sent on the following day, and although it did not amount in value actually to £84, I think that was a mutual dealing, in which there was an absence of any fraud on either side, and, therefore, that sum of £9 12s., the difference, can be properly retained by the company. The company will pay the costs of this case, but the order will be without prejudice to the right of the company if they repay the £165 to apply to increase their proof by that amount. The cases cited on behalf of the company (Alsager v. Currie, 12 M. & W. 751; Collins v. Jones, 10 B. & O. 777; Ennum v. Cato, 5 B. & Ald. 861) are all cases bearing upon the question what constitutes a mutual credit, and have, in my opinion, no bearing upon a case like the present, which I treat as a case of fraud.

(Before Mr. Justice LUSH.)

Getting up fictitious claims in bankruptcy—Subornation of perjury.

PETER BATES, an accountant, of Stockport, was charged with unlawfully suborning a man named Daniel Rogerson, to commit perjury in an affidavit, made in connection with certain proceedings in bankruptcy, by getting him to state that he was a creditor in the estate of a man named George Bowers, a butcher, residing at Chestergate, Stockport, for the sum of £19 12s. 10d.

Hughes appeared for the plaintiff.

Sweetenham for the prisoner.

Hughes, in opening the case, said the prisoner Bates was formerly in business at Stockport, and after that he acted as clerk to a solicitor there, and since then he had carried on business as an accountant on the same premises with Mr. Best. Mr. Best is a solicitor, who resided at Manchester, and practised there, and had also offices at Stockport, and the prisoner Bates acted as occasional clerk for Mr. Best. The facts of the case were as follows:—A man of the name of Bowers, who lived at Stockport, and was a butcher, was in difficulties in October last, and went to Bates to hear how he was to meet his difficulties, and Bates suggested to him that he should go through the Bankruptcy Court. Bates asked him as to his debts, and Bowers showed him a paper, in which he made out his debts, as nearly as he could to be about £293, and gave that paper to the prisoner. He thought it would appear on that paper that the name of Daniel Rogerson was not mentioned by Bowers as one of his creditors. When Bates asked him the amount of his debts, and he told him £293, Bates said to him, "You must make it more," and informed him that he must either have £10 or security for £10 to pull him through, which he promised to do at the first meeting, if he would follow his instructions. In consequence of that two persons of the names of Bagshaw and Rogerson agreed to be security for £10 and went to Bates's office and executed a promissory note to that amount. On Friday the 27th Oct., that was some time after the man Rogerson had been to Bates's office, Bates met him and asked him to come into the office, and while there to become a creditor for £10. Rogerson would tell them that at that time the man Bowers owed him no debt at all. Upon being pressed, and told that it was done in all bankruptcies, he said he was willing to do it, and upon that Bates said, "I will put you in for £20," which was £10 more than he at first consented to be "friendly creditor" for. Bates then filled up an affidavit of debt, and they went to the railway station, and there they found Mr. Boothroyd, a lawyer, and a commissioner to administer oaths in the Supreme Court of Judicature; and before him Rogerson swore to this affidavit, namely, that Bowers owed him £19 12s. 10d. for goods sold and delivered. There was just one other matter, and it was that at the first meeting of creditors, at which only the prisoner and Mr. Best's clerk were present, holding proxies for six alleged creditors, resolutions were passed, and the prisoner was appointed trustee to manage the bankrupt's estate.

Bowers, Edward Hyde Boothroyd, and Daniel Rogerson deposed to these facts.

Sweetenham urged several technical objections, but they were overruled by his lordship.

LUSH, J., summed up at considerable length. He said that this was a most important case, both to the commercial public and to the prisoner. They knew that there had been great complaints of the working of the bankruptcy laws, and if the practices and schemes spoken of really did take place one could not wonder that the estates of insolvent debtors did not go to the creditors, but into the pockets of others. As regards the absence of any motive for the incitement to perjury, his lordship pointed out to the jury that he was surprised sufficient motive could not be seen in the fact that if the list of creditors was swelled by fictitious claims against an estate those persons who represented the fictitious creditors got claims assigned to them. He could imagine a very considerable motive. After carefully recapitulating the evidence, his lordship directed the jury that there was no doubt Rogerson had committed perjury in swearing the affidavit, and if he did so at the instigation of the prisoner, knowing what it was for, the prisoner was guilty of the crime of subornation.

The jury, after two or three minutes deliberation found a verdict of "guilty."

The clerk of arraigns then called on the prisoner in the usual way if he had anything to say, and he replied, "All I have to say is that it is a deliberate conspiracy."

LUSH, J., in passing sentence, said: "The jury, after a very patient investigation of the matter, find you guilty, and I must say I entirely agree with the conclusion at which they have arrived. I don't see that it is possible to come to any other conclusion upon the evidence; and although those two persons have proved themselves not to be truth-tellers, nevertheless the circumstances altogether are such as to my mind are conclusive that you are guilty of the frauds imputed to you, and I cannot help thinking you have made a practice of it, because you set about it in a way that shows you have been in the habit of cooking up false claims on insolvent estates. I am afraid you are the representative of a class—rather a numerous class—who trade upon the estates of insolvent debtors. I don't wonder when practices of this kind are proceeded with that creditors are disgusted at the working of the bankruptcy laws. Such practices as you have been found guilty of would neutralise any system for the administration of a bankrupt's estate. I hope the time will come when no person will be allowed to interfere in proceedings in bankruptcy except those persons who have obtained a due status, and who are immediately responsible to the superior courts. I wish to add that I hope the Stockport Law Society will not allow the matter to rest where it is. I think this is a matter that deserves and ought to receive at the hands of that body a further investigation. They ought, I think, to ascertain—I hope they will be induced to do so—the history of the other depositions that have been put upon the file, and how far they represent real claims; and if they do not, to ascertain who are the parties who have been instrumental in getting them up. Now you have been found guilty. It is not often proof is so readily accessible, and not often, therefore, that persons who have been brought before the court on those charges have been obliged to succumb to the evidence. I feel I must treat this as a serious matter, and I cannot do less than impose upon you a sentence of fifteen months' imprisonment with hard labour.

COUNTY COURTS.

ABERDARE COUNTY COURT.

(Before T. FALCONER, Judge.)

PHILLIPS v. STEVENSON.

Sale—Title—Chattels—Bill of Sale.

HIS HONOUR, in giving judgment in this case, said:—The plaintiff sues for the value of a piano, purchased of one Eslake. In March, 1876, Eslake executed a bill of sale to the plaintiff, Moses Phillips, and among articles specified in the bill bill of sale was a pianoforte. The pianoforte was sold on the 14th April, 1876, to the defendant, who deals in pianos. It was purchased by him in a dilapidated state for £18 10s., which he says was the full value when it came into his possession. The instrument has been repaired, and the sum of £25 is claimed in respect of it by the assignee of the bill of sale. The claim to it is opposed on the ground that the defendant had no notice of the claim when he made his purchase; that Eslake had no right of property, and that there was a "standing by" which permitted the sale to be made. Very lengthened examination took place respecting the validity of the bill of sale, and whether or not more than one schedule was attached to the bill of sale at the time it was executed. As this question was before Vice-Chancellor Bacon, I consider myself bound by his decision, and therefore hold that the piano was well assigned to the plaintiff by the bill of sale. In the report of the case in Re Eslick, ex parte Phillips (L. Rep. 1 Ch. Div. 500), is remarkable. I am represented to have been over-ruled on four different points, and yet I only decided that as the operative part of the deed only mentioned the property in Dean Street and not in Seymour Street, I held, on the authority of the case of Ex parte Jarline, re McManus (31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 802), that the inventory could not enlarge the operation of the deed, the inventory including the property in Seymour-street, not named in the body of the deed. The question now is whether, through the sale to the defendant by Eslake, the assignor of the deed, the defendant has acquired a right of property to the piano. In the case of Cooper v. Willomat, one P. Savage, by a bill of sale dated in 1844, sold and assigned as a security for £100, to one Cooper, all his household goods, chattels and effects, mentioned in an inventory or schedule to a bill of sale. Some time afterwards Savage removed the goods and sold them absolutely to a furniture broker, who bought them in ignorance of the plaintiff's right, and in good faith, believing Savage to be the real owner. The judge nonsuited the plaintiff, reserving leave to enter a verdict for £27 if the action was held to be maintained against the purchaser. Mr. Justice Maule said:—The sale of the goods to the defendant undoubtedly was bona fide and honest, yet the plaintiff may recover them from him, for with respect of personal property entrusted to another in circumstances like the present, the law is clear. He had no right to sell, and no property passed. Whatever may be the inconvenience of such a rule of law it is, nevertheless, not of such a nature as to render it impossible to carry on the trade of a broker without profit, and even if the inconvenience were far greater than it is, that would not be an answer when the law is not doubtful. A case of Gregg v. Wells was referred to (L. J. 8 Q. B., N. S. 193), but in that case the owner present when the assignee dealt with them as his was own. As respects the damages claimed they must be the value of the article at the time of conversation, and not the present value. When the defendant, acting in good faith under the belief that he had acquired the lawful ownership of the chattel, has proceeded to lay out money on it to improve it and increase its value, the plaintiff will not in all cases be entitled to recover its full value in its improved state (Read and another v. Fairbank and another, 22 L. J. 206, C. P.). His Honour added that this country was so besprinkled with bills of sale that this case was one of the greatest importance to the numerous class of persons who purchase goods of assignors, in the expectation of helping a friend, and I am afraid, not uncommonly, to deprive money lenders of their security. They may find, however, that before they bought, it would have been advisable to have ascertained if the person they sought to assist may not have assigned away all his goods, and that the purchaser of his goods may be followed by the loss of money they have paid, when provident aid has led them to invest in the purchase of goods which the seller had no power to sell. There is a register of bills of sale in London, but it would be a great protective measure if there were a double registration, namely, not merely in London, but in the county court of the district where the business of the assignors is carried on. His Honour then gave judgment for plaintiff for £18 10s.

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.

Wednesday, March 21.

ALLEN v. ROWELL.

Liabilities of husbands.

THIS was an action brought to recover £33, being the rent of apartments taken by Mrs. Rowell, in February, 1876, and for necessities supplied to her.

It appeared that on the defendant selling the goodwill of the White Bear Hotel, about 1873, his wife appropriated £1200 to herself and afterwards left the defendant, and invested the money in the purchase of a Liverpool Dock bond in her own name. In November, 1875, the defendant was declared bankrupt, and in June last the trustee under the bankruptcy obtained an order from the court declaring that the £1,200 formed part of the bankrupt's estate. In November last the bankruptcy was closed, the defendant having paid 20s. in the pound, and the surplus moneys in the hands of the trustee, amounting to £1192, were handed over by the trustee to the defendant. Mr. Lowe, on behalf of the defendant, submitted that inasmuch as Mrs. Rowell had £1200 in her hands there was no implied authority on her part to pledge the defendant's credit; that at the time Mrs. Rowell made the contract the defendant's property was vested in his trustee, and that the plaintiff should have applied to the Court of Bankruptcy, as a court of equity, for payment of this £33 out of the bond. The learned judge adopted this view, and held that under the circumstances the plaintiff could not recover. He accordingly directed a nonsuit, with costs to be paid to the defendant.

BLOOMSBURY COUNTY COURT.

Thursday, March 1.

(Before G. RUSSELL, Esq., Judge.)

LEATHLEY v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Railway Company—Delay—Connecting Trains—Negligence—Damages.

THIS case, which had been adjourned at the defendants' request until after the decision of Le Blanc v. London and North-Western Railway Company, came on for hearing on the 5th Feb. last. The plaintiff, who is a solicitor, conducted his own case. Mr. Roberts, solicitor to the London and North-Western Railway Company, appeared for the defendants. After the law hearing on the question had been argued at length, it was agreed that in order to save the time of the Court, the facts on both sides should be admitted. The learned Judge stated that on account of the importance of the principles involved, both to the railway companies and the public, he should take time to consider his judgment. It was arranged that the defendants' solicitor should draw up the following statement of the facts, which, on its approval by the plaintiff, should be submitted to the Judge.

This is a plaint to recover the sum of 8s. 6d. for expenses incurred by the Plaintiff under the following circumstances, 5s. of which the plaintiff claims for compensation for loss of sleep and fatigue, and 4s. for the fare paid by him for fly hire from Twickenham to Hampton, less 6d., which he saved by not having to take the train from Twickenham to Hampton.

The defendants' railway commences by a junction with the North London Railway at Camden Town, and passes through several stations, amongst them Hampstead Heath to Willesden Junction, where it joins another railway called the North and South Western Junction Railway, which extends to near Gunnersbury, and there joins the London and South Western Railway, over which the North London Railway Company have running powers to Richmond. There is a line of railway belonging to the London and South Western Railway Company from Richmond to Twickenham, and thence to Hampton.

At Camden Town the London and North Western Railway joins the North London Railway, which latter railway runs in an easterly direction to Bow, where it makes a connection with the London, Tilbury, and Southend Railway in the direction of Tilbury and Southend. Over this railway the defendants and the North London Railway Company having running powers to Southend.

The North London Railway Company has arrangements with the London and North Western Railway Company for running trains over the line to Willesden in the direction of Richmond, and for the convenience of the public the passengers who take tickets at any station on the London and North Western Railway are permitted to travel in trains of the North London Company as they may wish.

On Monday, the 24th of August, 1874, the plaintiff obtained a ticket at the Hampstead Heath Station in time for the train due there at 10.21 p.m. for Twickenham, which train was due to arrive at Richmond at 10.47.

At Richmond plaintiff must have changed into a London and South Western train at 11, and would have arrived at Twickenham at 11.17, but the train was 28 minutes late in starting from Hampstead Heath Station under the circumstances hereinafter appearing; therefore the plaintiff did not leave Hampstead Heath until 10.48, and arrived at Richmond at 11.17, and at Twickenham at 11.50.

The plaintiff was intending to travel from Twickenham by taking another ticket to Hampton by the London and South Western Railway, by a train which would have arrived at Hampton at 11.29, but in consequence of the train by which he actually travelled being half-an-hour late at Twickenham, he was too late to catch the last train from Twickenham to Hampton that night, and in order to enable him to reach his destination he took a fly from Twickenham to Hampton, and claims from the defendants 3s. 6d. for such fly hire.

The defendants justify the delay of 33 minutes between Hampstead Heath and Twickenham under the following circumstances. It is the custom of the North London Company to run trains from stations on the London and North Western Railway between Willesden and Camden and other stations on their own railway to Southend and back, and on the 24th of August they had in fact booked passengers from several stations on their railway to Southend and back.

The Southend station is a station owned and managed by the London, Tilbury, and Southend Company, and the engine-drivers and guards' charge of the North London trains, are under the control of the London, Tilbury, and Southend Company's stationmaster.

The North London train, consisting of six carriages, from Southend, should have started from that place at 8 p.m., but was delayed 9 minutes, in consequence of a great rush of passengers coming to the station at the last moment, as is usually done on occasions of heavy traffic such as this was.

The train left at 9 minutes past 8, and travelled over the London, Tilbury and Southend line to Bow, but was considerably delayed between the signal-box called Low-street, and Bow Station, in consequence of its being behind time, and a train belonging to the London, Tilbury, and Southend Company being in front of it, and the signals being kept against the Southend train.

The safety of the public required the signals to be kept against the North London train, which being late in starting, was out of place on the line.

The North London train from Southend did not arrive at Camden Town until 10.35. Had there been no delay to this train, it would have arrived at Camden Town in time to meet the train there by which the plaintiff would have travelled, and have avoided any detention to him.

The officials at the Camden Station kept the Twickenham train, by which the plaintiff travelled, 28 minutes waiting the arrival of the North London train from Southend.

This train was the last train that night which ran over the London and North Western Railway from Camden Town to Willesden and Richmond, and the reason why the officials at Camden Town kept the Richmond train was knowing that several passengers were in the North London train from Southend, and destined for stations on the London and North Western Railway and holding return tickets.

HIS HONOUR:—In this action, on the 24th August, 1874, the plaintiff took a ticket from the Hampstead Station for the purpose of proceeding by a train to Hampton, which was timed, I believe, to reach its destination at 10.21 in the evening, and was running by way of Camden Town. It appears, however, that the North London Railway Company on the day in question had issued return excursion tickets by a train to Southend, which was due at Hampstead at 9.21, in consequence of which the plaintiff's train was delayed, which delay led to other delays. The stationmaster knew the Southend train was coming, and consequently delayed the plaintiff's train 28 minutes, causing the plaintiff additional delay at Richmond, where he, under ordinary circumstances, would have caught the Hampton train. The plaintiff then proceeds to Twickenham, where he finds the last train gone, for which the plaintiff has charged 8s. The amount is not in dispute, as if the Company are liable at all, they are liable for the whole amount. I have therefore to see if the Company are relieved from any blame—they apparently relying on the case of Le Blanche v. The London and North Western Railway Company. I am of opinion that the stationmaster voluntarily (I say voluntarily, and not wilfully) detained the train in order to benefit one set of passengers at the expense of another; and as the plaintiff was not made aware of this delay, I consider him entitled to recover. It is a fact that I have only the plaintiff's uncorroborated statement, still I rely upon it. If the time tables are evidence, am I to understand that every endeavour on this occasion has been made to carry their intentions out? I must say I think not. I think there is a general public convenience which ought not to be sacrificed to any special train, and I think the stationmaster at Camden Town was not justified in acting as he did, which conduct, in my opinion, renders the Company liable.

Judgment for Plaintiff for full amount claimed.

[We understand that the company do not intend to appeal.]

LEGAL NEWS.

LAW UNION FIRE AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

THE annual general meeting of this Company was held on Thursday, the 22nd, at the office, 126, Chancery-lane, W.C., James Cuddon, Esq., the chairman, presiding.

Mr. F. McGedy (the actuary and secretary) read the notice convening the meeting, and the minutes of the preceding annual meeting. The directors report and statement of accounts having been circulated amongst the shareholders, were taken as read.

The report was as follows:—

The directors have pleasure in submitting to the shareholders the accounts of the Company for the twenty-second year of its operations.

In the fire department, during the twelve months ending 30th November last, 6,175 proposals were made for insuring £5,785,190; and 5,783 policies and guarantees insuring £5,319,232, yielding new premiums to the amount of £27,557 ls. 6d., were completed.

In the life department, during the same period, 319 proposals were made for insuring £338,771, and 257 policies were completed, insuring £227,175, and yielding new premiums to the amount of £8,938 8s. 4d., of which £2,462 ls. 3d. were single premiums.

Seventeen annuities were granted, the purchase-money for which amounted to £8,690 2s. 11d.

The total number of life policies in force on 30th November last (exclusive of annuity policies) was 2,956, insuring the sum of £2,147,559.

The gross income of the Company (exclusive of the sums received for annuities) for the year ending 30th November last, amounted to £126,345 6s. 4d., which, added to the sum received for granting annuities, makes a total receipt of £135,035 9s. 3d.

The average rate of interest obtained on the gross assets of the Company during the past year was £4 10s. 7d. per cent.

The claims in both departments have been in excess of those of the previous year. In the life department, however, such increase is to be attributed, not to a high rate of mortality, but to the circumstance of several deaths having occurred amongst the large policies. With regard to the fire department, it must be borne in mind that the losses were exceptionally light in the previous year, and taking an average of the two years they are under the expectation.

The profit for the year in the fire department is £5,411 19s. 7d., four-fifths of which, namely, £4,329 11s. 8d., have been carried to the credit of the profit and loss account; and the remaining one-fifth, namely, £1,082 7s. 11d., has been added to the fire insurance fund, which amounts to £18,168 2s. 10d.

The profit and loss account shows a credit balance on the 30th November last of £20,726 7s. 7d., and out of that sum the directors recommend the payment of a dividend of 15 per cent. for the current financial year, leaving the sum of £11,726 7s. 7d. to be carried forward to credit of the dividend account for next financial year.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report and the accounts, said—Gentlemen, the accounts before you exhibit clearly and explicitly the state of the Company's business, as indeed all previous accounts have also done, so that at a glance you may form a perfectly accurate judgment of the condition of the Company and the progress made. As regards the fire business of the past year, while the new insurances are about £350,000 more than in the preceding year, yet the amount of new premiums is very slightly in excess of the premiums of the previous year. This, however, is rather favourable than otherwise, as it shows that the class of business has been of the very best kind. (Hear, hear.) The average sum insured by each fire policy issued during the past year was about £919. In the life department the variation in the amount of new premiums between the year 1875 and 1876 is slight, only a little over £200. The average sum insured per life policy issued during the past year is £883, or thereabouts. The total income has now reached £126,000 and upwards, showing upon the whole a clear increase of about £7,800 during the past year. Thus you will observe the income is gradually advancing, so that, exercising a little patience, we may rely on a future considerably larger revenue. If a moderate yearly increase of business be obtained without very much further yearly expenditure, the effect in the future on the profits must obviously be highly favourable.

Mr. Henry Mason—In the unavoidable absence of the deputy-chairman, I beg to second the adoption of the report.

The motion was agreed to unanimously.

Mr. R. W. Roberts moved "That the recommendation of the directors in their report now read as to the payment of a dividend and bonus be adopted, and that a dividend and bonus together after the rate of 15 per cent. per annum free of income tax, be paid to the shareholders on the paid up capital of the Company for the year ending the 30th November, 1877."

Mr. George Hyde seconded the motion, which was at once agreed to unanimously.

Mr. W. Newton proposed the re-election of the retiring directors.

The names of the directors were put separately to the meeting, and in each case Mr. T. H. Street seconded the nomination, the result being that each retiring director, as follows, was unanimously re-elected:—Mr. F. Charsley, Mr. S. H. Cooper, Mr. F. J. Coverdale, Mr. James Cuddon, Mr. P. E. Eyton, M.P., Mr. F. T. Keith, Mr. John Lambert, C.B., Mr. Henry Mason, Mr. R. B. M. Lingard-Monk, Mr. John Nanson, Mr. Charles Pemberton, Mr. J. F. Robinson, Mr. T. W. Salmon, and Mr. Erasmus Wilson, F.R.S.

Mr. Theodore Waterhouse was re-elected an auditor on the part of the shareholders, and Mr. James J. Darley on behalf of the directors.

The Chairman proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. McGedy, our able and painstaking actuary, and also to those who are immediately under him in the office, who conduct the business in a way which is eminently satisfactory to all parties concerned.

Mr. Roberts seconded the motion, which was carried.

Mr. McGedy (the actuary), responded.

Mr. Robins proposed, and Mr. Barkitt seconded a vote of thanks to the Chairman, who returned thanks; the meeting then dispersed.

A SOLICITOR CHARGED WITH FORGERY AND EMBEZZLEMENT.—At Bow-street, Mr. John Edward Fullager, a solicitor, lately employed in the Admiralty, was on Monday brought before Mr. Flowers, charged with stealing a cheque for £59 18s. 10d., forging an indorsement thereon, and forging and uttering a receipt for the same, with intent to defraud the Government. Mr. Poland, instructed by Mr. Hodgson, Solicitor for the Treasury, conducted the prosecution. He said it was his painful duty to make this very serious charge against a solicitor, who for some time had been employed by the gentleman now acting as Solicitor for the Admiralty, Mr. Bristow. The prisoner had been so employed since 1875. In January last he was engaged in a negotiation, on behalf of the department, with Mr. Reeve, a solicitor, of Lowestoft, respecting some land required there for the coastguard service. Mr. Reeve's bill of costs had been received, and the cheque in question was handed by the prisoner to Mr. Bristow for signature on Saturday, the 27th Jan. Mr. Bristow usually declined signing cheques on Saturdays. The form was again presented to him on the Monday following, when it was signed and returned to the prisoner, who undertook to forward the same, with the bill of costs, to Mr. Reeve, by the same night's post. In the ordinary course the cheque should have reached Mr. Reeve on the 30th Jan. (the next day), but it had transpired that the cheque, which was not crossed, had been taken to the Westminster branch of the London and County Bank on the 31st Jan., and paid across the counter in three £10 Bank of England notes and cash. In the meantime the prisoner had given Mr. Swainson, of the Admiralty, a receipt for the money, purporting to be signed by "R. H. Reeve," which he said he had received from Lowestoft, and which afterwards proved to be a forgery. The three £10 notes paid at the London and County Bank had been traced. The defendant was remanded for a week. [With reference to the above case Mr. Fullager, solicitor, of 6, Renfrew-road, Lower Kennington-lane, writes:—"I regret to state that the prisoner is my nephew, but since he was an infant I have never seen him. As I am the only London solicitor of the name of Fullager in the 'Law List,' I must ask you kindly to insert this letter, so that the public may not be mistaken."]

JAMES BROWN, ex-Alderman of Newport, Monmouthshire, and on three occasions Mayor of that borough, was on Saturday committed for trial by the county magistrates on a charge of fraudulently obtaining £150 from Mr. Moltham, solicitor, of London.

THE COUNTY COURTS ACT 1875.—Will you permit me to call attention to the working of sect. 1 of the County Courts Act 1875? It will be remembered that under that section a plaintiff may, in certain cases, on filing an affidavit of debt cause to be issued a summons in the form prescribed by the Act, to the effect that unless within sixteen days after personal service the defendant do not deliver notice of his intention to defend the action, the plaintiff will be entitled to judgment for payment of debt and costs forthwith. If the defendant within sixteen days gives notice of his intention to defend, the action proceeds in the ordinary course, and is set down for trial by the judge as a defended action. The operation of this provision, which at first sight appears to be a most excellent one, enables a defendant to render this enactment, so far as the plaintiff is concerned, entirely nugatory. The procedure, by default summons was no doubt intended to enable plaintiff to obtain prompt payment from defendants who have no defence. That the Act as it stands at present fails to carry out that object will, I think, appear from the two cases to which I am about to refer. In one case a default summons having been issued, the defendant gave notice of his intention to defend, and the action was set down for trial. The plaintiff in due course took out a witness summons and gave defendant notice to produce documents. There being no possible defence, the defendant on the morning of the court day sent a person to pay the debt. In the other case the defendant was sued on a default summons, and delivered notice of intention to defend. Shortly before the sitting of the court the defendant's agent called on the plaintiff, and, admitting the debt, applied for further time, which was refused. The plaintiff attended the court, and in an hour add a half the action was called on. The defendant's agent thereupon appeared and asked that the money might be made payable by monthly instalments. As the action was on a dishonoured bill of exchange due twelve months previously, and as at defendant's urgent request the payment of it had not been pressed, the plaintiff opposed the defendant's application, and applied for immediate payment. The judge ordered payment in a week. It will have been noticed that in both the above cases there was no attempt at a defence, although notice of intention to defend had been given; and further, that the defendants by giving notice obtained a better position than if they had not done so, even supposing that the time for giving notice expired on the court day. For in the absence of the notice the plaintiff would have had judgment for payment forthwith, but at the hearing the judge has power, notwithstanding there is no defence, to determine when the debt shall be paid, and whether in one sum or by instalments. The cost to the defendant is, I believe, no greater than if he had given no notice; for in either case only half the hearing fee is payable. But while the defendant obtains time and the probability of an order for payment by instalments; the plaintiff is put to the additional inconvenience of having to appear before the judge instead of the registrar, as in bona fide undefended cases. It would appear, therefore, that a defendant has it in his power, by giving notice that he intends to defend (when he has no defence and no intention of defending), and by appearing at the trial, to defeat the apparent intention of the Legislature in passing this section. By so doing he loses nothing; but, on the contrary, gains everything—time! To prevent this was, I believe, the object of the enactment. Happily this defect may be easily remedied. A clause in the County Courts Bill now before Parliament, or a short Bill to amend the Act of 1875, providing either—First, that if the defendant under a default summons do not before the expiration of sixteen days after service obtain leave from the registrar to defend, such leave to be given upon affidavit setting forth the grounds of defence or a good defence on the merits, the plaintiff may have judgment for payment of debt and costs forthwith; or, secondly, that if a defendant gives notice of intention to defend under sect. 1 of the County Courts Act 1875, and at the hearing admits the debt or offers no defence, the plaintiff shall be entitled to judgment for payment of debt and costs forthwith, and the whole of the hearing fee shall be retained by the registrar, as in defended actions, would perhaps render sect. 1 of the Act of 1875 a valuable and popular one. I will leave it to those of your readers who have had similar cases to those to which I have referred to decide whether the above suggestion is worthy of the support of the Profession. If so, perhaps the president of the Legal Practitioners' Society would consent to move the insertion in the present Bill of such a clause as I have mentioned, or, if necessary, to introduce a separate Bill on the subject.

COMMISSIONS FOR OATHS.—The new Law List shows the working of the system of appointment of commissioners of oaths under the Judicature Act. In 1873, under the old system, 720 names figured in the Law List under "London Chancery Commissioners," and 940 under the common law heading. So many of the Chancery commissioners also held the common law commission that the real number of London commissioners of all sorts must have been under 1200 at that time. Owing to the fact that the Judicature Act promised a commission for all courts to any commissioner in existence on 1st Nov. 1875, a great rush took place in that year, and the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer (notably the last) bestowed these appointments with great freedom, in some cases on solicitors whose standing was reckoned by months. The result was that no less than 1650 names appeared in the Law List for 1876 as commissioners in the London district, while the certificates to practise in the same district did not exceed 3400. The new Law List gives 1745 names for the London district. The figures alone set out demonstrate that the appointment has been so freely bestowed that nearly one-half of the London solicitors are commissioners, and apparently the number has been increased even under the new Act. The rule that a candidate must have been admitted and certificated for six entire years will perhaps somewhat tend to restrain the number, and it is understood that London solicitors able to comply with the rule do not necessarily receive the commission on lodging the petition. Without presuming to dictate to the fountain of authority from which these commissions emanate, I fancy I express a general feeling in saying that there is no need for a solicitor to be a commissioner whose partner already has the office, and that one commissioner in a house is enough. In Bedford-row and Lincoln's-inn-fields there are several instances where three commissioners may be found in the same house.

EIGHTEENPENCE.

LOCKE KING'S ACT.—Permit me through your columns to draw attention to a point which, I venture to submit ought to be dealt with by the Bill which has been introduced by the Lord Chancellor for the purpose of amending the Acts 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, and 30 & 31 Vict. c. 39, by making them apply to leaseholds. The point is this: By the Act 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69, s. 2, it is provided that "the word 'mortgage' shall be deemed to extend to any lien for unpaid purchase-money upon any lands or hereditaments purchased by a testator." As a necessary consequence of the use of the word "testator" in this section, it has been held that where lands have been purchased by an intestate it has no application, and his personal estate will remain primarily liable to discharge the lien: (See Harding v. Harding, L. Rep. 13 Eq. 493; Hudson v. Cook, 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 180, overruling the previous case of Evans v. Poole, LAW TIMES, vol. xlix., p. 50). The practical consequence is exemplified thus: A. buys an estate, but does not pay the purchase-money, and devises it to B.; here B. will have, if he takes the estate, to pay the purchase-money, but if A. in such a case dies intestate, leaving the estate to descend to B., his heir-at-law, here B. will be entitled to call upon the general personal estate to pay the purchase-money. Surely this was not meant by the framers of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69, especially as that Act is founded on the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, in which Act in the case of a mortgage no such difference between the case of testacy and intestacy exists, the word "person" being used there, and not the word "testator." I would suggest that in the Lord Chancellor's Bill an additional section is added repealing sect. 2 of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69, and re-enacting it in the same terms, except that at the end of the section instead of the words "a testator" the words be "any person." This would at once accomplish the construction that was attempted to be placed on the existing section by the late Vice-Chancellor Wickens in the case of Evans v. Poole. JOHN INDERMAUR.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST PROMOTERS OF COMPANIES.—I quite agree with your correspondent, "A Solicitor of Nineteen Years' Standing," that immediate steps ought to be taken by the London and provincial law societies to obtain the insertion of a clause in the Companies' Amendment Bill, brought in by Sir Hy. Jackson, Q.C., indemnifying solicitors, who, prior to the recent decisions in the Lisbon Tramways Case and the New Sombrero Case, have in good faith prepared and issued prospectuses omitting reference to contracts, which, although made by promoters, did not in any way affect the companies concerned, and which were therefore universally considered in the Profession (prior to the decisions referred to) as quite outside the meaning of the 38th section of the Companies Act 1867. Unless some such clause is inserted in the Bill many members of our Profession will be ruined, as the section renders not only the promoters but the officers of a company liable for the omission of reference to contracts within its meaning. In the Northern and Midland counties, as well as in London, an immense number of trading concerns have been formed into joint stock companies within the last five or six years, and in almost every case there have been agreements under which sums, either large or small, have been paid to the promoters for their risk and trouble, and not unfrequently the solicitors concerned have themselves been remunerated for their professional services under agreements, which the recent decisions would seem to show should have been referred to in the prospectuses. Your correspondents are right in saying that if these decisions are confirmed by the Court of Final Appeal, a flood of litigation will overrun the whole country, and scarcely anyone who has ever been connected with a public company will be safe. The matter is one which calls for instant action, and the Profession would have reason to feel grateful if you could induce either of the law societies, or some member of Parliament connected with the law, to take immediate steps to apply a remedy.

A PROVINCIAL SOLICITOR.

A PROFESSIONAL QUESTION.—I shall feel obliged if you or any of your readers, will offer a suggestion as to the best course to pursue under the following circumstances. A. filed a petition for liquidation. B., an accountant, was appointed receiver. A town solicitor attended the first meeting on behalf of creditors. B. was appointed trustee, and the town solicitor was intrusted with registration of the resolutions. At the request of the town solicitor the newly appointed trustee handed to him his appointment as receiver, and also sent his man, that they (the solicitor and receiver's man) might seize certain assets. The goods were seized by them, and partly sold by the solicitor, the remainder being taken to town, he asserting that a better market could be obtained for them there. The registrar refused to register the resolution for liquidation, on the ground that no statement of affairs was produced at the first meeting, and the proceedings have consequently fallen through. The matter at present stands thus: The receiver and the debtor's solicitor are many pounds cash actually out of pocket, whilst the town solicitor has helped himself to all he could get hold of, perhaps about £80, and of which he refuses to give any account. Under these circumstances, what action can be taken against the town solicitor, and by whom, the debtor having bolted out of the country? Is not this a case in which the Incorporated Law Society ought to interfere? Apologising for troubling you at such length, I enclose my card.

A COUNTRY SOLICITOR.

SOLICITOR APPEARING BEFORE INCOME TAX COMMISSIONERS.—Referring to the letter of Mr. Thomas C. Russel, at page 377 in your last number, he will find, on referring to sect. 25 of 43 Geo. 3, c. 99, which is one of those referred to and revived by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, s. 3, that "no barrister, solicitor, or attorney, or any person practising the law, shall be allowed to plead before the said commissioners [of income tax] on such appeal for the appellant or officers either viva voce or in writing." There is no need to say much as to the unfairness of such a clause, for the questions involved are often of great importance, are regulated by obscure and difficult statutes, and the officers who attend for the Crown are, for all practical purposes, lawyers, and indeed understand the statutes better than most lawyers do. It will be observed that the statute, while forbidding lawyers to plead, does not forbid them to attend for the purpose of advising their clients, and I should recommend your correspondent, next time he goes before the commissioners, to insist upon his right to be present, but undertaking not to address them. This course is sanctioned by the practice of the special commissioners at Somerset House, before whom I have often attended with my clients; and who, though bound by the statute not to allow me to address them, have never refused me permission to be present. I may add the recommendation, based on considerable experience in the matter, that all appeals on difficult and important cases should be taken before the special commissioners (see sect. 130 of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35). They are familiar with the Income-tax Acts, which is more than can be said for many of the general commissioners, and they have the advantage of being able to refer to the skilful lawyer who is solicitor of the Inland Revenue, from whom, and from the commissioners, appellants may rely on always receiving a courteous, patient, and intelligent consideration of their cases. C. M. G.

LEGAL EDUCATION.—I notice that Lord Selborne has again introduced his two Bills. What is the Legal Education Association doing? Surely it might at least get up some petitions in favour of the School of Law Bill or some modified form of it. As a subscriber to the society soon after it was started, I have been very much disappointed by its apparent apathy. G. S. G. W.

139. SUCCESSION DUTY.—By the Succession Duty Act and also by decided cases, the succession duty is specially asserted to be a charge on capital, and not upon income; are then trustees to whom residuary, real, and personal estate is left upon trust, to pay the joint income to a married woman for life, and on her death, falling children, upon trust (as to capital of both), absolutely for her brother, justified in paying the succession duty in respect of her life estate in the land, out of the capital of the above residuary personal estate, and could they be held responsible by any one for so doing, or must the trustees insist upon the married woman paying her own duty, and what are they to do in case she cannot do so? For although a special mode of paying the duty is by sect. 21 of the act pointed out, and extending the payments over eight half yearly instalments, yet nowhere is the income of the real estate made liable, but as above stated the act and cases expressly make the duty a charge on capital, and not income. 140. BANKRUPTCY—PRACTICE.—Will you or any of your readers inform me whether it is at all usual in any proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act to appoint as trustee a clerk in the employ of the debtor's solicitor, or whether there is any custom or usage to the contrary, and generally what is the practice of the profession as the point?

[Such a person is not under any legal disqualification, but it is not customary to appoint them, and it is a proceeding which should not be encouraged by solicitors.—Ed.]

141. JOINT STOCK COMPANY—COMPANY CLAUSES ACT, 1845—COMPANIES ACT, 1862—QUALIFICATION OF DIRECTOR.—If the Company's Banker be disqualified, is it usual or allowable for one of the bankers of the company in whose act the Company Clauses Act 1845, is incorporated, to become one of the directors of the company? Sect. 86 of the Company's Clauses Act, provides that if a director accepts or continues to hold any other office or place of trust or profit under the company, or be either directly or indirectly concerned in any contract with the company, or participate in any manner the profits of any work to be done by the company, the office of such director shall become vacant. Does a banker come within the terms "office or place of trust or profit under the company," and does it make any difference, whether such director is one of a private firm of bankers, or a director or proprietor in a joint stock bank? I know that in some cases of joint stock companies, one of the bankers is sometimes one of the directors of a company, but this may be under some power or exception contained in such company's articles of Association, or the provisions of the Company's Act, 1862, may not be in the same terms. As regards a joint stock banking company, I do not know whether the 5th sect. of the Company's Clauses Act would apply, which is to the effect that no person being a shareholder of an incorporated joint stock company, is to be disqualified by reason of any contract entered into by, or with such joint stock company. My own impression is, that bankers and treasurers of a company, may be directors, and do not come within the disqualification mentioned: (See the case of Sheffield and Manchester Railway Company v. Woodcock, 7 M. & W. 574; 2 Rail Cas. 523.)

The amount to be allowed is not in the discretion of the trustee and committee of inspection. The Report presented at a Meeting held on the 24th January last, showed:

1. AS TO THE PROGRESS OF THE SOCIETY.

That the growth and prosperity of the Society during the period of which it gave numerous details, had been what was manifest:

2. AS TO THE FINANCIAL POSITION OF THE SOCIETY.

That the Assurance Fund at the date of Valuation was £2,375,000.

And the calculated Liability at the same date was £1,700,000.

Thus leaving a Surplus of £675,000.

And that, after setting aside the Permanent Reserve of £200,000, and the fractional amount of £2,000 there remained for division the sum of £475,000, was larger by £30,000 than on any previous occasion.

3. AS TO THE RESULTS OF THE DIVISION.

That the sum which fell to the Assured would provide additional additions to the Assurance, amounting aggregate to £257,014, varying in individual cases from 21 per cent. and averaging over 50 per cent.

And that the Cash Bonus, which, being the present value of the Reversionary Bonus, was the true measure of the Reserve thus required was greater by £24,600 than which would have been needed by the Carlisle percentage.

4. AS TO THE BASIS OF VALUATION.

That the Institute of Actuaries' new H.M. or Health Table, based on the experience of twenty of the English and Scotch offices, with net premium—no cent. interest, had been used in the Investigation.

And that the severity of the new test, as well as the elasticity of the Society, were alike shown by the fact that the Reserve thus required was greater by £24,600 than which would have been needed by the Carlisle percentage.

The NEXT DIVISION OF PROFITS will take place on January 1, 1872, and Persons who effect NEW POLICIES before the END OF JUNE NEXT will be entitled to one year's additional share of Profit on Entrants.

the necessary economy of judicial force," as it utilises the judicial strength of the circuit commissioners by using it regularly. If a number of commissioners are appointed it is obvious that two results would be at once attained, a saving of judicial force, and an economical administration of the law. If the choice was simply between the appointment of such commissioners and an extension of the jurisdiction of County Courts we should not hesitate in preferring the former method of relieving the pressure of legal work in the Superior Courts. County Court Judges have already quite as much as they can do. At the same time it is a great mistake to determine whether such a change as that proposed by Lord SELBORNE should be adopted, simply and solely by a reference to the economy of the change. Fortunately, however, the change would only make more general a state of things of whose probable working a long experience exists to enable us to judge, and that experience is favourable. The Queen's Counsel and serjeants, from which bodies the commissioners are selected by the Judges under the present system, are quite competent to perform the duties that would be intrusted to them.

THE Court of Appeal, after having discussed the law of warranty very fully in the recently reported case of Randall v. Newson (36 L. T. Rep. N. S.), reversed the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division. The plaintiff sued for damages due to injuries caused by the breaking of a carriage pole supplied by the defendant, the maker. The pole broke upon the carriage being suddenly pulled up, and the jury found that the pole was not reasonably fit and proper for its purpose; but that the defendant was not guilty of negligence in supplying the pole. The court below entered judgment for the defendant upon these findings, whereupon the plaintiff appealed. The appellant relied upon Jones v. Just (18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 208); the respondent's case rested upon Redhead v. Midland Railway Company (L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 379). In the former case the question whether the maxim caveat emptor applies where there has been no opportunity of inspecting the goods sold was exhaustively discussed by a court consisting of the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, Mr. JUSTICES BLACKBURN and MELLOR, and decided in the negative. This statement, however, had been as distinctly enunciated by Lord ELLENBOROUGH in Gardner v. Gray (4 Camp. 145). "It appears to us," said Mr. Justice MELLOR, who delivered the judgment of the court, "that the maxim caveat emptor cannot apply, and that it must be assumed that the buyer and seller both contemplated a dealing in an article which was merchantable. The buyer bought for the purpose of sale, and the seller could not on any other supposition than that the article was merchantable have found a customer for his goods, and the buyer must be taken to have trusted to the judgment, knowledge, and information of the seller, as it is clear that he could exercise no judgment of his own; and this appears to us to be at the root of the doctrine of implied warranty, and that in this view it makes no difference whether the sale is of goods specially appropriated to a particular contract or to goods purchased as answering a particular description." In Redhead v. The Midland Railway Company the Exchequer Chamber decided that the contract made by a general carrier of passengers for hire with a passenger is to take due care to carry the passenger safely, and that it is not a warranty that the carriage in which he travels shall be in all respects perfect for its purpose, "that is to say, free from all defects likely to cause peril, although those defects were such that no skill, care, or foresight, could have detected their existence. Now it is obvious at a glance that the principles quoted in this respect, that the one referred to the liability of carriers, the other to that of manufacturers. Mr. Justice M. SMITH, in the latter case, remarked, as the appellant's counsel observed, that "the agreement to sell and supply goods at a price which may be assumed to represent their value is a contract of a different nature from a contract to carry, and has essentially different incidents attaching to it." The judgment of the Court of Appeal was delivered by Sir W. BALIOL BRETT. The first point taken by the court in its judgment was that the subject matter of the contract was a pole for the purchaser's carriage, and not simply a pole for any purpose. Having stated so much his Lordship proceeded to consider what was the implied contract of the seller as to the efficiency of the poles. In order to bring out the principle of law applicable, he considered a long string of cases and ultimately adopted the statement of the law given in Jones v. Just, "The governing principle, therefore," said his Lordship, "is that the thing offered or delivered under a contract of purchase and sale must answer the description of it, which is contained in words in the contract, or which would be so contained if the contract were accurately drawn out." But it may be said this principle does not apply to latent defects. The Court refused to introduce any limitation of the principle founded upon such a distinction unless some binding authority was produced to that effect. No such authority was forthcoming, the judgment of the court below was reversed. This decision will at least make it clear that the doctrine laid down in Redhead v. Midland Railway Company cannot be applied to a contract for the sale or purchase of an article to be applied to a specific pur-

SITTINGS OF THE COURT OF APPEAL.

A LIST was published in February (see the LAW TIMES of 24th Feb.), of the "Hilary Sittings for March" of the Court of Appeal "at Lincoln's Inn and Westminster," naming every week day from the 1st to the 28th, when the Hilary sittings ended. Any one reading the list would naturally have imagined that the Court would sit in two divisions, one at Lincoln's Inn and one at Westminster, or at least would sometimes sit at Westminster, and hear appeals from the Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer Divisions. But nothing of the sort has happened; the Court has not sat at Westminster once during March. It may be an advantage to suitors, and it certainly is a convenience to the counsel engaged, that appeals in cases in which counsel are likely to be away on circuit, should not be taken while the circuits are going on; but it can be no advantage or convenience to anyone that a list should be published of sittings which do not take place. It can hardly have been contemplated that the court should sit in two divisions during March. Appeals from final judgments must be heard before not less than three Judges: (Judicature Act 1875, s. 12.) The total strength of the Court of Appeal consists of eleven Judges, five ex officio (including the Lord Chancellor), three "ordinary," and three "additional ordinary." Of these eleven Judges five have been away on circuit, the Master of the Rolls has been sitting in his own court, and the Lord Chief Baron at Guildhall, Westminster, and Kingston. The power to summon additional judges from the High Court of Justice to sit in the Court of Appeal cannot be exercised during the times of the spring or summer circuits: (Judicature Act 1875, s. 4.) It must, therefore, have been quite plain, at the time when the list was published, that the court would not sit in two divisions on the days named, and it might easily have been stated from which divisions of the High Court of Justice appeals would be heard, and when the court would sit at Lincoln's Inn and when at Westminster, if it was intended to hold sittings at both places. It may be said that the convenience of counsel and solicitors cannot be considered, and that they must be ready to attend whenever there is the remotest possibility of the court sitting; but it must be remembered that any arrangement, or want of arrangement, which puts counsel and solicitors to unnecessary inconvenience is sure, in the end, to cause additional expense to suitors, for whose benefit the courts exist.

TIME THE ESSENCE OF A CONTRACT.

To decide whether time is or is not of the essence of a given contract, is a question which often takes much legal learning, and it arose in the recent case of Tully v. Howling (36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 163). This was an appeal from the Queen's Bench Division. The plaintiff chartered the defendant's vessel from a certain date; at the date mentioned in the charter-party the vessel was detained by the Board of Trade for repairs, and was not in fact ready to sail within two months of the time specified. The point with reference to the question whether time was of the essence of the contract, arose upon a counter-claim set up by the defendant, by which he sought to recover damages from the plaintiff, on the ground that he had refused to perform the charter-party into which he had entered with the defendant. The Queen's Bench Division decided that the plaintiff was justified in refusing to perform the charter-party under the circumstances, and this judgment was upheld in the Court of Appeal. On behalf of the appellant it was urged that the condition as to the staunchness of the vessel was not a condition precedent, and that as the delay was not such as to completely frustrate the object of the contract, it did not justify the plaintiff's refusal. Many cases were cited, but the only one which related to time charters was that of Havelock v. Geddes (10 East, 555). In that case Lord ELLENBOROUGH decided that a condition in a charter-party of affreightment, that the owner shall forthwith make the ship tight and strong for the voyage for twelve months and keep her so, is not a condition precedent to the recovery of freight, after the freighter had taken the ship into his service and used her for a certain period. So much for the actual decision, which obviously could not be cited as a direct authority to supply a ratio decidendi for Tully v. Howling, where the vessel had not been made use of by the charterer. "The defendants," said Lord ELLENBOROUGH, "did not repudiate the ship because she was not immediately made tight, staunch, &c., but took her into their service and employed her; and after having navigated her for several months, they say that, because this was a condition precedent, and was not performed, they are not liable to pay anything." His Lordship then gave expression to some opinions which bear directly upon the facts in the former case. "Had the plaintiff's neglect here precluded the defendants from making any use of the vessel, it would have gone to the whole consideration, and might have been insisted upon as an entire bar, because the consideration for the defendants' covenant to pay the freight would then have failed in toto;" but as the defendants had made use of the vessel the plaintiff's covenant was considered as going only to a part of the consideration, and the covenant was not looked upon as having raised a condition precedent, but as merely giving the Lord Ellenborough said again, in White v. Chapman (1 Sta. 113), decided in 1815, that where an agent was sued for money had and received for his principal, he would be entitled to deduct the amount of his commission on sales, unless it appeared "that he had grossly misconducted himself as agent." So it was ruled by Chief Justice Best (Hammond v. Holiday, 1 C. & P. 284), that if the duties of a sworn broker are executed in such a manner that no benefit results from them, he is not entitled to recover either his commission or a compensation for his trouble. So too the Court of Common Pleas decided (in Shaw v. Arden, 9 Bing. 287) that in considering an attorney's bill the jury were at liberty to discard an item for work entirely useless. So an auctioneer employed to sell an estate cannot claim commission if the sale becomes nugatory by reason of his default: (Denew v. Daverell, 3 Camp. 451.)

If the agent's work is not entirely useless, he will be entitled to claim on a quantum meruit in the absence of any special contract or custom.

In Hamond v. Holiday (1 C. & P. 384), heard at the Guildhall 1824, where a broker's claim for commission was disallowed, Chief Justice Best said: "It is the broker's duty to draw up the bargain intelligibly, and if he does not, he is entitled to nothing. I agree with the law laid down in the case cited (Haines v. Brisk, 5 Taunt. 521). There the contract was clear and intelligible, and the broker was allowed a compensation, he having done all that he was bound to do. But has this broker done all that he was bound to do? . . . If the defendant has received advantage from the acts of the broker, then the verdict should be for the plaintiff with proportionate compensation; but if the business has been performed in so slovenly a manner that no advantage has been derived from it, then the verdict must be for the defendant."

In Dalton v. Irvine (4 C. & P. 289) the plaintiff, a broker, was employed by a shipowner to procure a charter-party for one of the plaintiff's vessels. In a charter-party which was drawn up the plaintiff inserted as terms of freight one guinea instead of five guineas per ton, whereupon the defendant refused to sign, and the bargain went off between the defendant and the intended charterer. The plaintiff had incurred expenses, and had been desired by the defendant to use all expedition in the matter. In an action brought to recover commission with counts for money paid, work and labour, Chief Justice Tindall ruled that commission could not be recovered, as the subject-matter out of which it was to arise, viz., freight, was never obtained, and left it to the jury to say, first, whether there was any particular contract in the case to take it out of the ordinary rule; and, secondly, whether the defendant, by desiring the plaintiff to use all expedition, induced the plaintiff to lay out the money before the usual time; and, thirdly, whether when the charter-party was presented to him for signature, the defendant had a justifiable cause for refusing to sign it on the ground that it was not the contract he was entitled to expect. His Lordship directed them, that "in ordinary cases, if the charter-party is not carried into effect, the broker would not be entitled to recover for the incidental expenses, for they would follow the same course as the claim for the work and labour which, in such a case, has become altogether useless to the principal, and that, if the defendant was right in rescinding the contract, that would be an answer to the claim for expenses. A verdict was found for the defendant."

In a case where a solicitor's charges in respect of bills of costs for business done as a solicitor (White v. Lady Lincoln, 8 Ves. 363) were disallowed, Lord Eldon decided that a confidential agent in that character, and not simply as a solicitor, is bound to keep regular accounts, and where such an agent neglected to do so, or to preserve vouchers against himself, though he had preserved those in his own favour, his Lordship, on the ground of gross neglect of duty, would not allow a charge in respect of bills of costs in respect of work done as a solicitor. So, if an agent confounds his principal's property with his own, not only will he not be entitled to any commission, but he will be bound to account for the whole property, except what he can prove to be his own: (Lupton v. White, 15 Ves. 432.)

The principle laid down by a learned author with respect to the law of commissions is, that "the whole service or duty must be performed before the right to any commission attaches, either ordinary or extraordinary; for an agent must complete the thing required of him before he is entitled to charge for it. But cases may occur in which an agent may be entitled to a remuneration for his services in proportion to what he has done, although he has not done the whole service or duty originally required. This may arise either from the known usage of the particular business, or from the entire performance being prevented by the act or neglect of the principal himself": (Story's Agency, § 323.) It should be observed, however, that the agent cannot recover commission when completion of the business undertaken is prevented by the act of the principal, unless that act is wrongful.

The question was very fully discussed by the Court of Common Pleas in Simpson v. Lamb (17 C. B. 603), decided in 1856. This was an action by two clerical agents to recover the sum of 75*l.* for commission alleged to be due to them for negotiating (unsuccessfully) the sale of an advowson for the defendant. The defendant employed the plaintiffs to offer an advowson for sale, upon an understanding that in the event of a sale being effected through their agency, the latter should receive a commission of 5 per cent. upon the amount of the purchase money. Before the plaintiffs had sold the advowson the defendant himself sold it. The former, in answer to inquiries, had informed the latter that their terms were three guineas for registering, and 5 per cent. upon the amount of the purchase money, payable when the contract of sale was completed. The payment of the registration fee was waived. There was no evidence of any specific endeavours on the part of the plaintiffs to sell the advowson, or of their having incurred any expense in reference to it. At the trial Mr. Justice Cresswell ruled that the defendant was justified in selling the living himself; that it was fair to presume that the large amount of commission was taken in successful cases as a sort of compensation for the risk incurred; that the plaintiffs could not recover anything unless they sold; and that what was done by the defendant did not amount to a wrongful revocation of the plaintiffs' authority to sell. He thereupon directed a nonsuit. Chief Justice Jervis said: "I take it to be admitted that it is not competent to a principal to revoke the authority of an agent without paying for labour and expense incurred by him in the course of his employment. The right of the agent to be reimbursed depends upon the terms of the agreement. A general employment may carry with it a power of revocation on payment only of a compensation for what may have been done under it; but there may be also a qualified employment under which no payment shall be demandable if countermanded. In the present case I think the evidence showed that the employment was of that qualified character—like the case of the house agent or the shipbroker—the plaintiffs undertaking the business upon an understanding that they were to have nothing if they did not sell the advowson, taking the chance of the large remuneration they would have received if they had succeeded in obtaining a purchaser." And it was said by Mr. Justice Crowder: "If it could be shown that the agent is by the wrongful act of the principal prevented from carrying out the work on which he is employed, he would be entitled to a reasonable remuneration for what he had done." A rule nisi for a new trial was discharged.

LEGISLATION AND JURISPRUDENCE.

FORFEITURE RELIEF BILL.

A BILL to Amend the Law of Relief against Forfeiture for Breach of Covenant or Condition. Whereas relief is granted against forfeiture for nonpayment of rent:

And whereas by section four of the Act of the twenty-second and twenty-third years of the reign of Her Majesty, chapter thirty-five, intituled "An Act to further amend the law of property and to relieve trustees," it is enacted that a court of equity shall have power to relieve against a forfeiture for breach of a covenant or condition or insure against loss or damage by fire when no loss or damage by fire has happened, and the breach has in the opinion of the court been committed through accident or mistake, or otherwise without fraud or gross negligence, and there is an insurance on foot at the time of the application to the court in conformity with the covenant to insure upon such terms as to the court may seem fit:

And whereas by section five of the said Act it is enacted that the court where relief shall be granted shall direct a record of such relief having been granted to be made by indorsement on the lease or otherwise:

And whereas by section six of the said Act it is enacted that the court shall not have power under the said Act to relieve the same person more than once in respect of the same covenant or condition; nor shall it have power to grant any relief under the said Act where a forfeiture under the covenant in respect of which relief is sought shall have been already waived out of court in favour of the person seeking the relief:

And whereas it is expedient to amend the law of relief against forfeiture for breach of covenant or condition in manner herein appearing:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. Short Title.—This act may be cited for all purposes as the Forfeiture Relief Act, 1877.

2. Repeal of secs. 5 & 6 of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35.—Sections five and six of the said recited Act shall be and are hereby repealed.

3. Relief against forfeiture under leases.—Relief may, at the discretion of the court, and according to the circumstances of the case, be granted against forfeiture for breach of covenant or condition under any lease in all cases (including cases of insurance) in like manner as relief is now granted against forfeiture for nonpayment of rent.

altogether devoid of good results. A correspondent in our last issue pointed out that of late little or nothing has been heard of the Legal Education Association, and he urged what we concur in, namely, that it would be well if the machinery of the society were again set in full swing. The officers of this society, however, like many other organisations of the kind, render honorary service, and this being the case, those who subscribe should remember the great sacrifices which such services entail upon those who undertake such offices. We trust that solicitors will keep steadily in view the great importance of giving more than mere pecuniary support to this association, inasmuch as, besides the other necessary reforms which constitute its raison d'être, it offers the best medium for securing those changes in connection with the relations between the two branches, the nonfulfilment of which will remain a constant source of just and warrantable irritation and annoyance to every high minded solicitor in the country. To every end there is usually some especially attractive means, and in this matter education affords the means to the end which solicitors must have in view—namely, not to drag down the Bar, but to lift their own Profession to an even higher level than that to which the Bar attained in its palmiest days. The education of the Profession will never rest on a sound and substantial basis until a general school of law, or some institution akin thereto, be established, and it was for such a purpose that the late Mr. Justice Quain bestowed such a munificent gift under his will upon trustees. It is worthy of comment that since the Legal Education Association was founded the Inns of Court have from time to time increased the severity of their examinations, and have increased the inducements offered for successful study; but more remarkable still is the fact that these improvements have usually been ushered in close about the time when Lord Selborne has each session introduced his Bills as before-mentioned. The last instance of this has just occurred, for while only last month Lord Selborne introduced his Bills into the House of Lords—this week the Inns of Court have issued a new programme to Bar students in regard to the study of Jurisprudence and Roman Civil Law.

In another column we publish a letter from a solicitor at Maidenhead, in which he makes so violent an attack upon the Incorporated Law Society as to somewhat weaken an otherwise strong position in regard to the shortcomings of this chief law society of solicitors. Much that our correspondent urges is, we are sorry to say, true enough, while it is evident that as regards some of his complaints, he is not fully versed in the recent work and action of the Council of the Incorporated Law Society. One curious fact is lost sight of. Large numbers of members of the society are continually complaining that the council does not do what it ought to do on this, that, or the other subject, and yet these discontented members never avail themselves of the rules and bye-laws of the society, in order to do through the general body of members, what the council fails to do, and while the members of the council are thus left altogether undisturbed, except by an occasional individual grumble, it is natural enough that they should go in for a "rest and be thankful" policy. It would be a step in the right direction if a committee of members of the society outside the council was appointed to examine and report upon the constitution and government of the solicitors of the Supreme Court in Scotland. We have lately adopted their designation, but the professional and general position of an English solicitor is hardly so good as that of a Scotch solicitor or Writer to the Signet. At the next annual general meeting of the Incorporated Law Society, in July, we should like to see a brisk encounter, with a view to secure the election on the council of some solicitor or solicitors known to have advanced ideas, and the will and energy to carry them into effect, or, at all events, to arouse the whole profession from its present condition of noisy complaining to decisive action. It must not be forgotten, however, that although much remains to be done, the council of the Incorporated Law Society has done more for its members and for solicitors generally than any other organisation, especially during the last three or four years, and this is due, no doubt, in a great measure to the outside pressure which has been brought to bear upon it by the formation of other and local law societies. The position of the council is a difficult one—it has to meet the demands of solicitors of a very modern school, and it has to guard and promote the immediate interest of solicitors throughout the country.

We have received another copy of the prospectus of the "British and Continental Law Society," making the seventh copy we have recently received, two of which we have lately published. Further publication is useless. Our present correspondent in sending the prospectus says: "I enclose you a paper handed to me by a client of mine, who informs me that he has not only received numerous papers of a similar nature, but has also received letters from the same source, asking him to entrust legal matters of business to him. I leave you to make what use you think proper of these 'specimen' documents."

MR. G. A. HEMMING, a costs draftsman, of London, has forwarded to us a short pamphlet upon the subject of the losses sustained by solicitors through not sending in bills of costs in due course, and as regards party and party, or other costs to be taxed, through not having the same prepared by competent clerks. At the end of the publication we find the following table, which agrees in most respects with that published by us in a recent issue. It is not now usual or necessary however, to annex a copy writ of summons to an affidavit of service thereof on the defendant. The following simple scale may be useful to country solicitors, as showing the proper agency charges for serving an ordinary writ under the new Acts: Copy writ for service (if made by agent), 1s. Service thereof, each defendant, 5s. The masters have discretion to allow an additional fee where extra trouble is occasioned to effect service. Mileage, per mile beyond two miles from agent's office, one way, 1s. Letter, reporting service, 3s. 6d. If writ served by substitution, 3s. 4d. may be charged for each attendance (usually three). When affidavit required of service 5s. Of substituted service (according to length), 1s. per folio drawing and 4d. engrossing. Copy writ to annex, 1s. Paid oath, 1s. 6d. Letter therewith, and with original writ, 3s. 6d.

A GLOUCESTERSHIRE solicitor forwards to us the following circular letter received by a client of his:—

Collector of Rents, Debts, &c., &c. (Address Lower Barton-street, Gloucester, and Newent).—Sir,—I am instructed by Mr. — to apply to you for the sum of £ — due from you to Mr. —, and I now inform you that if the same be not paid to me at once, I shall proceed against you according to the Act. I trust, however, you will deem it prudent to pay the above amount before the day above stated, and thereby avoid the expenses to which you will otherwise subject yourself.—I am, Yours, &c., WILLIAM DUTTON, Auctioneer, Agent, Rent and Debt Collector. Mr. —. Dated this 10th day of March, 1877.

The italics are our own. There is not the least objection, in point of law, to anyone applying for money due to another person, but the threat, "I shall proceed," &c., is really a threat of intention to do that which if done by a person in Mr. Dutton's relative position to the creditor would be illegal.

SIMON v. WATSON.

Schoolmaster—Agreement for a term's notice or a term's fees—Pupil's attendance prevented by illness.

The breach of a contract rendered impossible of performance by illness.

Held, not to give a right of action.

DEMURRER.

This was an action by a schoolmaster against the father of a pupil for a term's fees, under an agreement that a term's notice of the pupil's removal from school should be given, or a term's fees paid.

The plaintiff sent the boy home in the middle of the previous term in consequence of illness breaking out in the school. The boy himself was ill; and when the school met again at the beginning of the next term he was still ill, and did not return then or at all.

Boddam, for the plaintiff, cited—Taylor v. Caldwell (3 B. & S. 826; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 356); Robinson v. Davison (L. Rep. 6 Ex. 269; 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 755); Benjamin on Sales, p. 456.

SMITH v. THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

APPEAL FROM INFERIOR COURT.

Carrier—Railway company, liability of—Passenger's luggage—Agreement between passenger and porter.

A passenger left his luggage at a railway station with a porter, to be sent after him by omnibus. Part of it was lost.

Held, that the railway company were not liable. CASE stated by the County Court Judge of Kidderminster.

The personal luggage of a passenger by the defendants' railway was unloaded from a train, and placed on the platform of the station for the plaintiff to claim and remove. There was an omnibus at the station at the moment to take away the luggage, so the passenger requested a porter to take charge of it until one should arrive, and then to send it to a particular hotel. The passenger left the station.

An omnibus arrived, but went away again without taking the luggage. When it returned again, a dressing case, part of the luggage, was missing. The rest of the articles reached the hotel within three quarters of an hour of the arrival of the train at the station.

There was the usual notice that the company would be liable only for goods left in the cloak room, &c.

The County Court judge gave a verdict for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the court upon the case.

J. Digby, for the defendants, contended that the contract with the company came to an end when the goods were handed over to the porter. He cited Richards v. London and South Coast Railway Company (18 L. J. 251, C. P.); Butcher v. London and South-Western Railway Company (4 L. J. 137, C. P.); Agrell v. London and North-Western Railway Company (34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 134, in notis); Leach v. South-Eastern Railway Company (34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 134); Lovell v. London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company (31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 127).

Hugh Neville, for the plaintiff, argued that the duty of the carrier extended over a reasonable time after the arrival of the train at the station, and that the porter by undertaking the charge of the luggage bound the company.

The COURT (Grove and Lindley, JJ.) held that the arrangement between the plaintiff and the porter was confined to themselves only, and did not bind the company; that the passenger chose to accept the responsibility of the porter; and that the company's liability, therefore, ceased. Verdict set aside.

BEAR v. JONES, DOOWRA, AND PAPILLON.

APPEAL FROM INFERIOR COURT.

Municipal election petition—Sufficiency of description—Error of Burgess roll—38 & 39 Vict. c. 54, s. 1, sub-sect. 2.

Immaterial inaccuracies in the nomination paper of a candidate for a municipal office under the Municipal Election Act 1875.

Held, not to be objection to his return.

THIS was a petition against the return of the respondents Jones and Doowra, as councillors for the borough of Colchester, stated in the form of a special case by order of Denman, J., pursuant to 35 & 36 Vict. c. 60, s. 15, sub-sect. 6, and rule 27 of Michaelmas Term 1875.

The petitioner was nominated as a candidate, and against his name on the Burgess roll for the time being in force, as the "Street, lane, or other place in this parish where the property is situated for which he is now rated" was entered "St. Botolph's House, Magdalen-street." No other name of "Bear" appears on the Burgess roll.

In his nomination paper he is described under the head of "Abode," as of "St. Botolph's House" only. It was objected that this was not a sufficient description.

Eight names were appended to his nomination paper. The fourth name was Henry Ward Graves, the fifth William Bunting. The former on the Burgess roll is described as "Grove, Henry." The objection to the latter was withdrawn. An objection being made to the nomination as insufficient, the defendant Papillon, who was mayor at the time, allowed it; and the respondents, being the only remaining candidates, were declared elected.

A. Wills, Q.C. and Austie for the petitioner.

J. O. Griffiths, Q.C. and J. C. Hannan for the respondents.

LORD COLERIDGE, C.J.—The Municipal Election Act 1875, s. 1, sub-sect. 2, requires that every candidate shall be nominated in writing subscribed, by two enrolled burgesses of the borough or ward, as the case may be, as proposer and seconder, and by eight other burgesses of such borough or ward, as assenting to the nomination. Each candidate shall be nominated by a separate nomination paper, which shall state the surnames and other names of the person nominated, with his place of abode and description, and shall be in the form No. 2 set forth in the 1st schedule to the Act, "or to the like effect." The common sense view of this case is that the description "St. Botolph's House" is perfectly sufficient; and there is no assertion that it is not a sufficient one for all other purposes. Then, again, it is not suggested that the two gentlemen whose names are appended as those of burgesses assenting to the nomination

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

Inquiries, as to Students' Societies, as to the several Examinations, as to Admission on the Roll of the Supreme Court, as to being called to the Bar, and as to taking out and renewal of annual certificates, should be addressed to the Editor (Students' Department).

THE United Law Students' Society is to be congratulated upon the success which has so far attended the formation of a circulating law library at Clements-inn Hall, Strand. The Honorary Librarian has already received donations to the library fund amounting to upwards of £50, and amongst the donors are the Right Hon. Lord Hatherley, the Right Hon. Sir George Jessel (Master of the Rolls), Mr. Serjeant Parry, H. T. Young, Esq. (President of the Incorporated Law Society), J. P. Benjamin, Esq., Q.C., Sir Henry James, Q.C., M.P. Sir D. Salomons, Bart., and W. Gordon, Esq., M.P. (solicitor). The following, among others, have forwarded legal works for the use of the library—viz., the proprietors of the LAW TIMES (26 volumes), Sir George Bowyer, Bart., D.C.L., M.P., Mr. Charley, D.C.L., M.P., and Mr. F. O. Haynes.

THE following lecture is appointed to be delivered in the Hall of the Incorporated Law Society, Chancery-lane, during the ensuing week: Thursday, Common Law Lecture, 6 to 7 o'clock p.m. Subscribers are not admitted to the hall after lectures have commenced. The lectures and classes in Equity and Conveyancing have now terminated.

ARTICLES of clerkship (whether original or supplemental), or assignments of articles of clerkship, dated on any day during April, must be enrolled and registered at the Petty Bag Office on or before the same day in the month of October next, and when articles or assignments are required to be, and are, enrolled and registered on any day during the month of April, they must be produced and entered at the Law Institution on or before the same day in the month of July next. See 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, ss. 8 and 9, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, s. 7. Failure to comply with these statutory requirements often entails a loss of time upon articled students.

WHERE articles expire between 10th Jan. and 15th April, candidates may be examined in January. If between 14th April and 22nd May, candidates may be examined in April; if between 21st May and 2nd Nov., in June, and if between 1st Nov. and 11th Jan., in November: or, of course, at any subsequent examination. Six weeks' notice at least is necessary for these examinations, the same to be calculated up to the first day of the month of examination.

MR. DICKINSON, the equity lecturer at the Law Institution, will hold an examination on the subject of his lectures and classes on Friday, the 13th inst., in the Examination Hall, in Chancery-lane; and Mr. Bond, the conveyancing lecturer, will hold a similar examination in conveyancing on Friday, the 20th inst. Subscribers to the several lectures and classes are invited to attend.

BIRMINGHAM LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY. ON Tuesday evening, the 27th March, the above society held its 604th ordinary meeting in the Library Room of the Law Society, Henry Parish, Esq., in the chair. Mr. Hadley moved a resolution for founding an annual prize to consist of books of the value of £3, to be presented at the annual meeting to the student, being a member, who should write the best essay on some legal or jurisprudential subject to be annually determined upon. The resolution was very warmly supported, and carried almost unanimously. A debate then took place on the following point: "A. is the owner of the leasehold interest in a house, and by a codicil to his will, after reciting the lease under which he holds, bequeaths the house and all his estate and interest therein unto B. for all the residue of the said term of ninety-nine years." A. subsequently purchases the freehold and dies without having altered his will or codicil. Does B. take the house in fee simple?" Mr. Shore opened in the affirmative, and was supported by Messrs. Edwards, Crosskey, and Hargreave; Mr. Plant replied in the negative, and was followed by Messrs. Ison and Hadley.

A vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the meeting.

BOLTON ARTICLED CLERKS' SOCIETY. THE last ordinary meeting of this society for the present session was held on Wednesday, the 28th March last, at the Bolton Law Society's Rooms, Wood-street. Mr. R. H. Horrocks occupied the chair, and introduced to the meeting C. F. Lumb, Esq., M.A., LL.B., Barrister-at-Law, one of the vice-presidents of the society, who read a very able and instructive essay on "The Fourth Section of the Statute of Frauds," and in its conclusion referred to the condemnatory remarks on the statute uttered by Lord Chief Justice Cockburn at the recent Devonshire Assizes. This gave rise to an animated discussion of his lordship's opinion, which was extensively commented upon, but the feelings of the meeting were not fully determined, as the matter was not put to the vote.

BRISTOL LAW STUDENTS' DEBATING SOCIETY.

A MEETING of this society was held in the Law Library, Small-street, Bristol, on Tuesday, 20th March. The chair was taken by W. Henderson, Esq., solicitor, and the subject for discussion was "That the Vivisection Act (39 & 40 Vict. c. 77) is not beneficial." The affirmative was opened by Mr. Carpenter, seconded by Mr. Jacques; and the negative by Mr. Millard, seconded by Mr. A. H. Hughes. Messrs. Pease, Daniel, Graham, Cross, Sturge, and Hooper also spoke on the motion, which was lost by a majority of one vote. The usual vote of thanks to the president terminated the meeting.

HULL LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

THE sixteenth annual general meeting of this society was held at the Law Library on the 27th ult., Mr. A. M. Jackson, solicitor, in the chair. The secretary read the annual report, which was as follows:

Your committee have much pleasure in presenting the following report of the society's proceedings during the session which now closes.

During the session nine gentlemen have been enrolled as honorary members, and thirteen as ordinary members, increasing the number of honorary members to sixty-eight, and the number of ordinary members to thirty-seven. With respect to the numbers of its members the society has never heretofore been in such a prosperous condition, and this is more especially the case with reference to the ordinary members, who at the conclusion of the last session numbered only twenty-eight—a number at that time greatly in excess of any former year. The rapid increase in the ordinary members of the society from ten in the year 1875, to twenty-eight in 1876, and to thirty-seven in 1877, is at once the best evidence of its welfare and the guarantee of its future success.

The inaugural meeting of the society was held at the Station Hotel on the 21st Oct. 1877, and was largely attended by both honorary and ordinary members. After the members had partaken of a tea, at the invitation of the president, a mock trial took place, which in the result was a decided success, inasmuch as it afforded both instruction and amusement to the members. Your committee have to thank the president for his kindness on the above occasion, and for the great interest which he has shown in the welfare of the society throughout the session.

During the session nineteen ordinary meetings (exclusive of the inaugural meeting) have been held, the average attendance at which has been fourteen (the largest attendance being twenty, and the smallest seven) and the average number of speakers seven. As compared with last session this shows an increase of one in the attendance, but a decrease, likewise of one, in the number of speakers. Contrasting the number of ordinary members belonging to the society this session with those of last session, this decrease in the number of gentlemen taking part in the debates is a cause of deep regret, and the more so when it is remembered that the principal object of the society is the cultivation of the art of public speaking.

The evil just noticed has most probably been caused by the invariable absence from the debates of one or more of those gentlemen who have been appointed by your committee to speak at the various meetings held during the session, and having, as a general rule, when so absent, been unrepresented by deputy, in accordance with the regulations of the society. So far indeed has this prejudicial practice prevailed, that on an average one-half of the number of appointed debaters have been absent, and on one occasion it was impossible to discuss the point by reason of the absence of three out of the four gentlemen named to take part therein. Your committee cannot too strongly deprecate this evil practice which is necessarily injurious to the prosperity of the society, and they would draw the attention of members to the fact that the success and consequent usefulness of the society depends not on the exertions of the few, but on the individual perseverance of the many, and would therefore recommend that, in order to abate the mischief before adverted to, each member should not only be regular in his attendance at the meetings, but should also attend prepared to take part in the discussions.

At the meetings of the society the greater part of the debates have been on legal moot points, but several discussions have taken place on subjects of general interest, and on such occasions your committee have to report that decidedly better debates have ensued, a fact to which they beg to draw the attention of the incoming committee.

Your committee announce with pleasure that since the presentation of the last annual report, three members have passed the final examination, and been admitted solicitors, and seven members have passed the intermediate examination.

During the past year the LAW TIMES and, by the kindness of J. D. Sibree, Esq., the Law Journal have been circulated amongst the members of the society.

The library has been increased by the addition of twelve legal works, and it is satisfactory to announce that the circulation of the books has been greater than in any former year.

The finances of the society are in a satisfactory condition, as will appear from the treasurer's balance sheet, and your committee recommend the expenditure of a portion of the funds in hand in purchasing books for the library.

Your committee take this opportunity of thanking those solicitors who have with so much willingness presided at the society's meetings to the great advantage of its ordinary members.

In conclusion, your committee hope that the flourishing condition of the society will long continue, and for the maintenance of this they invite the hearty co-operation and exertion of its members, feeling assured that by such means only can the manifold advantages to be derived from the society be secured.

The report was adopted.

The treasurer read his balance sheet, showing a balance in hand of £23.

Officers for the ensuing year were elected. Mr. T. H. West, of 25, Parliament-street, Hall, was elected hon. secretary.

It was resolved that fourteen books should be purchased for the library. Also that the sum of £1 ls. be subscribed to the United Law Students' Society.

Other business having been transacted, the meeting was brought to a close by a vote of thanks to the chairman.

LAW STUDENTS' DEBATING SOCIETY.

AT the meeting of this society, held at the Law Institution, on Tuesday last, Mr. Gibb, LL.B., in the chair, the question discussed was "Ought capital punishment to be abolished?" Mr. Warrington opened the debate on the negative side of the question, and a most interesting discussion ensued. The question was eventually carried on the side espoused by the opener by a majority of one vote only.

LEICESTER LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

THE thirteenth meeting of this society, for the session 1876-77, was held in the Law Library, Friar-lane, on Wednesday evening, March 28th, R. Harvey, Esq., in the chair. The subject for discussion was, "Is the establishment of a court in Europe for the settlement of international differences desirable and practicable?" Mr. W. M. Moore opened the debate, and was followed by Mr. Holyoak, Mr. — Moore, and Mr. Hincks. The chairman having summed up the question was put to the meeting, and decided in the negative by a majority of three.

THE LEEDS LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

IN consequence of Mr. Lawrence Gane's absence, Mr. V. T. Thompson, Barrister-at-Law, presided at the meeting of this society, held last Monday evening. The subject under discussion was—"Can a contract within the Statute of Frauds be wholly waived or abandoned before breach, by a subsequent agreement not in writing?" Mr. Warren opened the case in the affirmative, and very ingeniously took advantage of the wording of the question, to put a case of a contract not in writing under the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds. Mr. Keny supported the negative. Gowan v. Salisbury (1 Vern. 240), Goss v. Lord Nugent (5 B. & Ad. 58), Harvey v. Graham (5 A. & E. 61), Adams v. Wordley (1 M. & W. 380), Buckhouse v. Crosby (2 Eq. Cas. 82), Noble v. Ward (2 Exch. Rep. 136), Sanderson v. Gress (L. Rep. 10 Eq. 234), Emmett v. Dewhurst (21 L.J. Ch. 497), were amongst the cases cited. A vote was taken of the members present, the majority of whom voted in the affirmative. An unanimous vote of thanks was presented to the chairman at the close of the meeting.

UNITED LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

THE usual weekly meeting of this society was held on Wednesday at Clements-inn Hall, J. P. Davies, Esq., in the chair. The secretary presented a report of the condition and progress of the society, a portion of which we publish below, after which several business questions were discussed. On Monday next a legal discussion will take place at the Law Institution. At next week's meeting, at Clements-inn Hall, the following question will be debated: "That monasteries and convents should be placed under Government inspection."

QUARTERLY REPORT OF THE HON. SECRETARY OF THE UNITED LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

I have again the pleasure to present a quarterly report, in which I can speak of the continued prosperity of the society, indeed I doubt whether in any like period since its establishment it has shown greater activity or more usefully or successfully added to the many advantages which it offers to its members.

Twenty-nine new members have been added to our roll since the beginning of this year. Of this number three were elected honorary members, and four were admitted without election, being respectively members of societies in union.

Eleven ordinary meetings have been held, at which the aggregate attendance has been 311, or an average attendance of twenty-eight at each meeting. This, I believe, the highest average yet attained in this society.

I am pleased to say that I am informed by our treasurer that financially the society is in a very satisfactory condition.

in their venerable antiquity. That two systems, essentially conflicting in their natures, should exist side by side, apparently serving no other purpose than to make confusion worse confounded, would appear incredible to an intelligent foreigner. Happily this can be no more. The Queen's Bench Division cannot set its sails by an east wind, and the Chancery Division by a west wind. Where equity and law conflict, the former must prevail. We have arrived, in the nineteenth century, at the point reached a thousand years ago at Rome, that fount of much of modern jurisprudence. The proctor's edict effected indirectly what the Judicature Acts have done directly. The wild dream of the enthusiast is realised: law and equity are fused, fused, at least, as far as legislative enactments can weld them together. What measure of success the attempt is fated to have it is difficult to predict; but the terms of the Act seem so precise and so uncompromising that one cannot well see how its object can be defeated. A fusion of the law judges and the equity judges would have done much to remove any danger of the clause being sent to the wall, as were the feeble attempts at reform in the same direction, contained in the Common Law Procedure Act; but a fusion of judges was, I presume, impossible. Much will depend on the manner in which the courts exercise the power conferred upon them of transferring actions from one division to another. If the Common law divisions confine themselves to actions of ejectment and cases whose necessities will be met by a verdict for debt or damages, the fusion clause will be gradually lost sight of. If, on the other hand, without trespassing on the ground which the Act has left exclusively to the Chancery Division, the common law courts display a readiness to exercise the power they now possess of making such order as the justice of each case shall require, fusion will be an accomplished fact. This consummation might perhaps have been facilitated in two ways. The readiest would have been to discard the terms equity and common law. As denoting conflicting systems of law they are now useless. They never aptly indicated the distinction they were intended to point. The term equity is associated in the minds of laymen, and of many lawyers too, with the notion of natural justice—a justice, of course, it frequently exhibited, but which was the result only of the more liberal views of men and manners taken by the equity judges, and not of anything inherent in the constitution of the Court of Chancery. The term "positive law" ought to be sufficient to embrace the systems hitherto in conflict, now united. Whenever, in argument, it is necessary to refer to the ancient distinction, it would be wise to speak of Chancery law. One other suggestion would, it appears to me, have assisted in making all remembrance of what was, but is no more. Why preserve the names of the courts? Why not speak of divisions A, B, and C? And why not allude to the matters within the respective exclusive jurisdictions as causes relegated respectively to division A, B, and so on? Names that have been associated with certain ideas in the past tend to perpetuate them.

Another alteration in the substantive law springs from its importance and from its justice, and needs some comment. The distribution of a deceased's estate would, not very many years ago, have been for many strictures to which it was equally liable immediately before the Judicature Act. As is well known, each of the five principal kinds of debts—namely, crown debts, judgements debts, specialty debts in which the debtor was bound, specialty debts in which the debtor was not bound, and simple contract debts—had a law of its own and remedies of varying degrees of efficacy. The equality that the common law would, one was entitled to expect, was not a fiction among creditors for valuable consideration. It is certainly illustrative of the equality of our law that this equality was not to be found in our own system. Historical monuments, however, ought not to interfere with the fusion, and the clause of the Act of 1875 providing that in the administration of the estates of deceased persons dying after the commencement of the Act, the same rules as to the order of payment may be in force for the debts under the law of bankruptcy, is a provision that has too long been a source of our admiration as producing a more complete and more satisfactory system of judgment. The measure has been a success. Crown debts, and it is to be hoped, the debts of all creditors, are now in the same position as other adjective law, and will find their natural place in a subsequent portion of this essay.

I now pass on to view what constitute the leading feature in the Judicature Acts, namely, the important changes that our system of procedure has undergone.

Constitution of the Courts.

The constitution of our courts is a subject of much interest, chiefly, however, from the historical thoughts that their origin recalls to the mind. How the curia regis gradually resolved itself into the numerous branches we were acquainted with until recently is a matter more for the historian than the jurist; but one may be permitted to digress for a moment to observe the kind of retribution by which the curia regis we had lost sight of is restored to its former dignity, under the title of Supreme Court of Judicature, of which the numerous courts are subordinate limbs. The Supreme Court is divided into the High Court of Justice and the Court of Appeal. The House of Lords retains its appellate jurisdiction under a form which shows more distinctly than ever the miserable fiction under which it lingers on. My remarks upon the subject of appeal I reserve for a subsequent portion of this essay. To the High Court is assigned the whole of the original jurisdiction exercised by the Court of Chancery, the Superior Courts of Common Law, the Courts of Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty, Common Pleas of Lancaster and Durham, and courts held under commission of assize. The Court of Bankruptcy, included by the Act of 1875, is left unaffected by the Act of 1875; and there is wisdom in this. The rules of bankruptcy law are so heterogeneous in their nature and in their application, the distribution of insolvent estates requires machinery so peculiar, that it was certainly well to sacrifice somewhat of the oneness aimed at in the original design of Lord Selborne to the additional convenience that seems to ensue from leaving the Bankruptcy Court intact. The court, again, is divided into five divisions, and any judge may sit in a court belonging to any division, or for any other judge. Each division is to entertain any suit and afford any remedy that might have been recognised or applied by any one of the consolidated courts. For convenience sake, however, and perhaps to reconcile the heart of those who cling with affectionate regret to the institutions they have venerated from their first years, the special statutory jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery is confined to the Chancery Division, and matters, formerly exclusively within the jurisdiction of any of the common law courts, are restricted to the corresponding division of the High Court. The power of transfer conferred upon each division will certainly prove a weapon of considerable utility. No suitor, henceforth, after incurring the expense and undergoing the mental strain of taking a case to hearing, will be told that his suit is bad for want of equity, and that he must take refuge in the arms of brother common law; or, worse still, a litigant at law consigned to the tender mercies of equity, a wretched, as it were, to leap from Sylla into Charybdis, because the common law, telling him in one breath he is entitled to relief, informs him, in the other, that he cannot get it there. Even in matters assigned exclusively to a particular division the court may, if it think fit, allow a suitor who has sought relief in the wrong division to continue his action and obtain his remedy therein.

Every action in future will be commenced by writ of summons, calling upon the defendant to cause an appearance to be entered for him. This course presents obvious advantages over the mode always adopted in Chancery of filing a bill of complaint. To do this entailed, almost invariably, a large expenditure of time and labour, and some money, in counsel's fees. The result was a not infrequently bulky document, which often was at once the beginning and the ending of the suit. Every writ of summons must contain an indorsement, setting forth the nature of the plaintiff's claim, and the relief or remedy he considers himself entitled to. In cases of debt or liquidated money demand, the same facilities are afforded for entering final judgment as existed under the Common Law Procedure Act 1852; and, further, the plaintiff may, where a vexatious appearance has been entered, compel the defendant to show the grounds for being permitted to defend; and, in the absence thereof, may enter judgment as though no appearance had been entered. This power has been very extensively used throughout the district registries. Country solicitors unite in praising its efficacy in frustrating attempts to gain time by vexatious appearance.

In many kinds of cases plaintiffs frequently experienced considerable difficulty in determining the exact person against whom they were entitled to redress. In questions of principal and agent this difficulty often proved a fatal stumbling block to the plaintiff at trial. The utmost freedom in joining parties as plaintiffs and defendants is permitted by the Act, and in the first case, in my principal's office, that was tried under the Judicature Act, the 6th rule, Order XIV. of the Act of 1875, which permits a plaintiff who is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to redress, to join two or more defendants, relieved the plaintiff from very considerable embarrassment. It is, however, in the pleadings in an action that one of the moral salutary reforms effected by the Acts and rules is to be observed. A short review of the various methods of pleading extant before Nov. 1875 will enable us the better to appreciate the vast change our system of pleading has undergone. At common law a plaintiff might declare the common counts and the defendant might plead the general issues. This method had the advantage of meaning almost either nothing or everything. It had the further merit of giving the other side no idea of the cause of action or the ground of defence. It served, too, to inspire juries with the early impression that the case they were sworn to try was a hopeless mystery the very Sphinx could not unravel. For instance, a court for goods sold and delivered might be declared simply to try the question whether two persons were man and wife, or a plea of no guilty in an action for personal injuries against a railway company might mean either that plaintiff was not in the accident at all; that he was in the accident, but was not injured; that the accident resulted from the act of God; or that plaintiff contributed by his negligence.

According to another method of pleading, the allegations set forth a legal conclusion but not the facts, investitive or divestitive, which, in Austin's sense of the word, constitute plaintiff's or defendant's title. Pleading specially, the third method in use among common lawyers, approximated very nearly to the system introduced by the measures we are discussing. It consisted in pleading the facts which, with Austin, we may call the title, leaving the court to attach to them their legal consequences.

In Chancery the pleadings have been narrative of facts, but from the carelessness with which the pleadings were drawn, bills and answers alike set out facts, statements and documents, at the utmost length and with very little regard to their pertinence to the questions at issue. Pity but that in our pleadings we could have imitated the brevity and conciseness we admire so much in those framed by the jurists of Rome—a brevity and conciseness however expressed in a form that sacrificed nothing of the elasticity which was the only merit of our common courts. Now, however, it is provided that "every pleading shall contain as concisely as may be a statement of the material facts on which the party pleading relies, but not the evidence by which they are to be proved." If the object of pleading be what it ought to be, it is surprising to reflect how many years and how much agitation have been needed to arrive at the point we have now reached.

The Acts not only affect the form of pleading, but the matter which may be pleaded. A defendant in any action "may set off or set up by way of counterclaim against the claims of the plaintiff any right or claim. And such set off or counterclaim shall have the same effect as a statement of claim on a cross action, so as to enable the court to pronounce a final judgment in the same action, both on the original and the cross claim. The power of set off thus conferred is as large as can well be desired, and considerably extends the limits within which, by previous statutes and the decisions of the judges, it had been confined. Damages may be set off against debt and debt against damages, and the necessity of cross actions is obviated in all but very rare cases. Hastily premising that ready means of discovery are afforded, and that several considerable alterations with regard to the modes of trial and the adducement of evidence are provided, and regretting that the limits that are imposed by the rules of competition forbid my commenting upon those interesting points more fully, I pass on to what appears to me one of the most beneficial, as it certainly is one of the most daring, reforms we owe to the Judicature Acts. I refer to the institution, throughout the land, of district registries of the high court. These district registries in the great advantages localisation possesses over centralisation, resemble somewhat the County Courts of our Saxon forefathers. The merger of those tribunals in the Superior Courts that gradually arose from the curia regis, perhaps freed us from the danger of territorial laws. It may be that to the centralisation policy, to which the ancient County Courts succumbed, we owe that in England, as erst in France, we have not separate provinces acknowledging different systems of law. But now that the vast discoveries of science have swept away the restraints which time and space placed upon the intercourse of man, there is no ground for apprehending that in a country where men so freely and so frequently commingle, the localisation of systems should ensue from the localisation of procedure. The short period during which the district registries have been open to trial has more than suffi-

CITY MAGISTRATES, ROCHESTER.

(Before the MAYOR, N. E. TOOMER, Esq.; ALDERMEN E. R. COLES, F. M. WEBB; W. BELL, and W. P. HAYMEN.)

Application for a Summons under the Lottery Act. APPLICATION was made by a Mr. Francis McDonald, agent for the Marlins Tea Company, for an information against Mr. Frank Roberts, of Strood, for an alleged infraction of the Lottery Laws, caused by that gentleman selling "Bonus Tea Packets," which the public was induced to buy through a promise printed on the covers that some of the packets contained threepenny pieces or other coins. The magistrates adjourned the application until to-day, so that the informant might consult a solicitor and point out under what section of the Act he meant the information to be laid.

Mr. J. Hall, a clerk to a firm of London solicitors, appeared and said that Mr. McDonald wished to have the information laid under the 42 Geo. 3, c. 119, ss. 4 and 5. He said that under the 5th section the penalty was fixed, and under the 4th section the course of procedure was pointed out, by which Mr. Roberts was liable to be convicted as a rogue and vagabond.

The Magistrates' Clerk (Mr. J. T. Prall) pointed out to the Bench that sect. 4 did not in any way apply to sect. 5, which enacted a pecuniary penalty, whereas by the Act of 46 Geo. 3, c. 148, all pecuniary penalties in such a case were only recoverable by action at the suit of the Attorney-General before the Court of Exchequer. Sect. 4 did not apply to that at all.

The MAGISTRATES decided that they could not grant the information under these sections.

Mr. Hall then applied for the information under sect. 2, which referred to any person publicly or privately keeping open, or exposing to be drawn by dice, or any other way, any game or lottery, &c., but whilst the Magistrates were considering this application, Mr. Hall received a telegram from London ordering him to withdraw all proceedings.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

BRADFORD COUNTY COURT.

Feb. 6 and March 6.

Ex parte DICKEN; Re HAMILTON.

8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18—Wagering Contracts—Stock Exchange—Gambling.

Balances due from a trader to a broker for differences upon dealings in stocks and shares, where neither party intend any real sale or purchase, but only payment of differences on gambling debts, are not provable in bankruptcy. (Grisewood v. Blane, 21 L. J., N. S., 46, C. P.; Nicholson v. Gooch, 25 L. J., N. S., 134, Q. B.; Robson on Bankruptcy, 3rd edit. 251), and securities given by a trader for such future balances are void (Fisher on Mortgages, p. 377, and authorities there cited), and ordered to be delivered to the trustee.

Gardiner for the motion.

West, instructed by Rawson, George, and Wade, opposed.

HIS HONOUR.—This is an application by Henry Dicken, the trustee under the bankruptcy of W. B. Hamilton, trading as W. B. Hamilton and Co., grease and oil manufacturers, a bankrupt, for an order that Edward Smith, of No. 9, Tokenhouse-yard, in the City of London, Esq., do deliver up to Dicken, as such trustee, two several indentures dated 22nd April 1875, and made between the bankrupt of the one part and the said Edward Smith of the other part, affecting a dwelling house and premises, situate and being No. 3, Blenheim-road, Manningham, in the parish of Bradford; and for an order directing Smith to convey the hereditaments comprised in the said indentures respectively unto and to the use of Dicken as such trustee as aforesaid, his heirs and assigns, free from all charge or incumbrance thereon created by Edward Smith, but subject as in the said indentures of 22nd April 1875, is mentioned. And also for an order directing the said Edward Smith and Edward Burgess Smith, also of No. 9, Tokenhouse-yard, in the City of London, stock and share broker, to deliver up to the said trustee a certain bill of exchange for £380, dated the 22nd June 1875, payable four months after date, and accepted by Hanson Farrar, then of Kirkgate, Bradford, aforesaid, tailor, now a liquidating debtor, and directing the said Edward Smith and Edward Burgess Smith to do all acts necessary for enabling the said trustee to obtain the benefit of any security or judgment held or obtained by the said Edward Smith and Edward Burgess Smith, or either of them, for payment of the said bill of exchange, and for that purpose to use their names in any proceedings or otherwise; and also for an order directing the said Edward Smith to pay to the said trustee the sums of £40 8s. 6d. and £50 10s. 7d., the amount of two dividends received by him under the liquidation by arrangement instituted by the said Hanson Farrar in this court, in respect of a judgment recovered by E. B. Smith and Co., in Her Majesty's High Court of Justice against the said H. Farrar, and to do all such acts as shall be necessary to enable the trustee to receive any further dividends upon the said debt. And that Edward Smith and E. B. Smith may pay the costs of this application. The conduct of the bankrupt in respect of a large amount of debts which, from his statement of affairs presented to his creditors, it appeared he owed to stock and share brokers in Bradford, Manchester, Liverpool, and London, has been made the subject of public examinations before me; and it appeared that, although a small trader, with a capital of not more than £4000 embarked in his business of a grease and oil manufacturer, he had, during the last two or three years, gambled in stocks and shares to the amount (including nominal sales and resales, purchases and continuations) of nearly five millions, and which had resulted in losses which drove him to bankruptcy, and it also appeared that between the month of June, 1875, and Feb. 1876, he had had transactions of that nature with the respondent, Edward Smith, to the amount of about one million and a half, which had resulted in a loss to the bankrupt, up to the 29th Feb. 1876, of £8302 8s. 8d. On the 23rd March 1876, Hamilton filed a declaration of insolvency, and was forthwith adjudicated a bankrupt. The 20th May was appointed as a special day for the examination of the respondents before me, and they came from London in obedience to the summons, but on the day before that appointed for their examination, the respondents, with their solicitor, Mr. Wade, called upon the trustees' solicitor, and then stated that they should not make any claim to prove against the bankrupt's estate in respect of the balance of £8302 8s. 8d. due to them, and they undertook that their solicitor should write to the trustees' solicitor a letter to that effect, and it was then arranged that upon the receipt of such a letter the examination should not be proceeded with. Accordingly, on the 19th May 1876, the respondent's solicitor wrote and sent to the trustees' solicitor a letter of that date, as follows:—"Bradford, 19th May 1876. Dear Sir,—Re W. B. Hamilton's liquidation. As arranged at our conference this morning, we beg to say that after consulting with us in regard to their claim against the above estate, Messrs. E. B. Smith and Co. have authorised us to say that they do not propose to make any claim to rank as creditors, and that they abandon any right they may have to claim against the general estate of the debtor. It is understood between us that the arrangement not to claim as creditors does not affect in any way the right of our clients to make the most of the securities which Mr. Edwd. Smith holds for the debt of £1459 5s. 2d. taken over from Messrs. D. and F. Kemp and Co.—We are, dear Sir, yours faithfully, RAWSON, GEORGE, and WADE.—Walter Gardiner, Esq." Upon receipt of this letter the summons for examination was withdrawn, and on attending on the following day for the special purpose of examining the respondents, I was told the interests of the creditors did not require that the examination should take place, as an arrangement had been made, which, in the interest of the creditors, rendered such an examination no longer necessary. It has not been contended before me that the present application is against the good faith of the arrangement come to on the 19th May, or that the trustee is not at full liberty to inquire into and contest the validity, as against the bankrupt and for the benefit of the creditors, of the securities sought to be impeached by the notice of motion; but I think it is very much to be regretted that the arrangement come to on the 19th May was not made final and conclusive as to all questions between the bankrupt, the estate, and the respondents, so as to have rendered this litigation unnecessary. The court, however, being now called upon to decide the rights of the parties in respect of such securities, I am compelled to inquire into the real nature of the transactions, and ascertain, as well as I can, their legal character, and must then determine whether, as between the bankrupt and the respondents, if there had been no bankruptcy, the bankrupt could have obtained against the respondents that relief which the trustee now asks for, it being remembered that in such a case as this the trustee represents the bankrupt, and has no greater right than he would have had if not bankrupt, and can obtain no relief which the bankrupt could not have obtained if solvent. Now the real facts of the case appear to me to be very plain, although on the part of the respondents, and especially the respondent Edward Smith, laboured attempts have been made to mystify them. They are these. The bankrupt, for some time previously to April 1875, had been gambling very extensively in stocks and shares at Bradford, Manchester, and Liverpool, and had not been successful, and at that time he was minded to try his luck on the London Stock Exchange. He became acquainted with Edward Smith, who had formerly carried on business in Bradford, but had gone to London, and appears to have had some connection with persons who engaged in speculative transactions on the London Stock Exchange. Edward Smith was not a member of the London Stock Exchange, and was not qualified to enter into transactions on that exchange in his own name; but, according to his own account he transacted business as managing clerk of a firm carrying on the business of stock brokers under the names of D. F. Kemp and Co., Kemp being a member, it may be presumed, of the London Stock Exchange. The other member or members of the firm (if any), who answered to the "and Co.," were not disclosed. Edwd. Smith states he was not a member of the firm of D. F. Kemp and Co., but that he transacted Stock Exchange business on behalf of the firm, as their managing clerk, and was remunerated according to the result of his operations, but he is careful to state that he was not a partner. He alone attended to and transacted all the business of the bankrupt on the London Stock Exchange in the name of D. F. Kemp and Co. In that business the bankrupt knew no one but Edwd. Smith, and through him alone all the transactions were conducted. In April 1875, after it would seem the bankrupt's operations on the London Stock Exchange had begun to be carried on through the agency of Edwd. Smith, he (Smith), was desirous to obtain from the bankrupt some security for the balance of his account in respect of the transactions he was conducting for the bankrupt on behalf and in the name of D. F. Kemp and Co., and with that view the deeds of 22nd April 1875, to which this motion applies, were prepared and executed. The first of these deeds purports to be made between the bankrupt, described as an oil importer, of the one part, and Edward Smith, of No. 9, Tokenhouse-yard, in the City of London, Esq., of the other part. It is executed by the bankrupt only; it contains no recital; but for a nominal consideration of 5s. paid by Smith, the bankrupt grants to Smith his heirs and assigns the plot of land and the messuages and buildings erected thereon therein described, with the usual general words, To hold unto and to the use of Smith, his heirs and assigns subject nevertheless to an indenture of mortgage dated the 21st April instant, and made between the bankrupt of the one part and Joshua Wade and John Henry Wade of the other part, and the principal and interest moneys thereby secured. And it was declared that the conveyance thereby made to Smith was upon the trusts following, namely, upon trust that Smith, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns should in his or their absolute discretion sell the hereditaments either by public auction or private contract, with full power to give receipts to purchasers, and out of moneys to be produced by the sale and the rents and profits in the meantime, pay all costs and expenses, and stand possessed of the residue or the unsold parts thereof for the time being upon such trusts and under and subject to such powers, provisions, agreements and declarations as are or should be declared concerning the same respectively by an indenture already engrossed bearing or intended to bear even date with those presents, and made or intended to be made between the said Edward Smith of the one part, and the said W. B. Hamilton of the other part. This deed contained a power to Smith to lease for fourteen years at rack rent in possession subject to such covenant as Smith should think proper, the usual indemnity clauses to purchasers, and limited covenants for title; and the deed was duly registered at Wakefield on the 14th May 1875. The second deed, dated 22nd April 1875 purports to be made between the said Edward Smith of the one part and the bankrupt of the other part, each described as in the other deed. It is executed by the bankrupt, not by Smith, nor is it registered. After reciting the deed of even date it states that the thereinbefore recited indenture was made and executed for the purpose of securing the balance of the account then due and owing, and thereafter to become due and owing by Mr. W. B. Hamilton to the firm of Messrs. D. F. Kemp and Co., of No. 9, Tokenhouse Yard, in the City of London, brokers, and it had accordingly been agreed by and between the parties thereto that Mr. Edward Smith should as trustee for the said firm, stand seised of the said plot of land, messuages, hereditaments, and premises, and the money to arise from the sale thereof in pursuance of the power of sale contained in the said recited indenture upon the trust, &c., thereafter contained. It is witnessed that in consideration of the premises it was declared that Smith, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, should stand possessed of the said plot of land, messuages, and hereditaments, and the moneys to arise from the sale thereof under the power of sale contained in the said recited indenture, upon trust until default should be made in payment by the said W. B. Hamilton, his heirs, executors, and administrators to the said firm of D. F. Kemp and Co., of the balance of the money for the time being due and owing from the said W. B. Hamilton to their firm, or some part thereof, for one calendar month after written notice should have been given by or on behalf of the said firm to the said W. B. Hamilton, or left at his place of abode requiring such payment to be made, pay the rent and profits to arise from the said hereditaments to, or allow the same to be received by, the said W. B. Hamilton, his heirs, executors or administrators, but if such default should be made for the space of one calendar month, then the said Edward Smith, his heirs or assigns, should or might sell the said hereditaments in pursuance of the power of sale contained in the said recited indenture of even date, and apply the money to be produced by such sale, and the rents and profits in the mean time, in paying all costs and expenses, including premiums on fire insurance, and apply the residue of the said moneys in or towards satisfaction of the balance of the moneys due and owing by the said W. B. Hamilton, his executors or administrators, to the said firm of D. F. Kemp and Co., on the security of these presents, and the surplus (if any) to the said W. B. Hamilton, his executors, administrators, or assigns. These deeds upon the face of them carefully, and as I think designedly, omit to show the real character of the dealings and transactions between the parties. The bankrupt is described as an oil importer, Smith, as an Esquire, and the firm of D. F. Kemp and Co. (who are not parties to either deed) are referred to as "brokers," between whom and the bankrupt there had been transactions in respect of which a balance of account was then due, and a further balance might become due. Prima facie, and without any explanation alibi, the deed would appear to be a security for moneys due and to become due from an oil importer to his London broker in respect of the ordinary transactions in business between traders standing in that relation towards each other, and which would be free from all objection as to its legality. From the undisputed facts of the case it is clear that the two deeds were prepared for the purpose of securing the balance due and to become due for differences upon dealings in stocks and shares which were not, and were not intended to be, real transactions of sale and purchase, but mere wagering transactions as to the price of stock and shares on particular days. Was a security for such transaction legal? If not, could the bankrupt have recalled it and demanded its return, and if refused have enforced its return by proceedings in the Court of Chancery. This is the real question, but the respondent, and especially Edward Smith, have tried to avoid that question being raised by setting up a special title in Edward Smith, alleging the following circumstances. He alleges that the account between D. F. Kemp and Co. and the bankrupt as made up to the 14th June 1875, showed a balance due from the bankrupt to D. F. Kemp and Co. of £1459 5s. 2d., and that in the interval between the 14th and 29th June an arrangement was made between him and the firm of D. F. Kemp and Co., by which he took over certain accounts, and amongst others that of the bankrupt, and paid and settled in account that sum with the firm of D. F. Kemp and Co., and became thereby the equitable assignee of the debt, and entitled to the benefit of the securities then held by him as trustee for the said firm of D. F.

Kemp and Co. The bankrupt had no knowledge of this arrangement, or of the alleged payment of this balance by Smith to D. F. Kemp and Co.; but on the 27th June the bankrupt wrote to the firm of E. B. Smith and Co. a letter, requesting that firm to take over his account from D. F. Kemp and Co. This letter was written at the request or with the privity of Edward Smith. The firm of E. B. Smith and Co. consists of the respondent, E. B. Smith, but whether of any other person or persons who make up the and Co. does not appear; but Edward Smith insists he is not a partner in that firm, and that after ceasing his connection with D. F. Kemp and Co., he became the managing clerk of the firm of E. B. Smith and Co., and in that character he conducted all the transactions of the bankrupt with the firm of E. B. Smith and Co. from the month of June, 1875, to the end of Feb. 1876. The bankrupt appears to have been as ignorant of the real relations, whatever they were, of Edward Smith with the firm of E. B. Smith and Co., as he was of E. B. Smith's real relation with the firm of D. F. Kemp and Co. All he appears to have known was that from first to last Edward Smith personally conducted all his gambling operations on the London Stock Exchange, whether in the name of the one firm or the other. Edward B. Smith has sworn that the balance of £1495 5s. 2d., now claimed by Edward Smith as his separate debt in the character of equitable assignee of D. F. Kemp and Co., was handed to him by Edw. Smith for collection. If as between these two persons that allegation is correct, then, as it is not pretended that the bankrupt had any knowledge of that fact, and as E. B. Smith and Co., with the privity of Edw. Smith, accepted and acted upon the request of the bankrupt contained in his letter of the 27th June, and treated the debt of £1459 5s. 2d. as a debt due from the bankrupt to E. B. Smith and Co., and an item in the subsequent account between them, that debt, as a separate debt, has been discharged by the subsequent dealing, and cannot now be recalled into separate existence, and must be treated as part of the ultimate balance of £8302 8s. 8d., which has been abandoned as a claim against the estate of the debtor, and as between Edw. Smith and E. B. Smith and Co., assuming that, as alleged, they are separate parties (and I conceive I am not called upon to say whether I believe the allegation or not), that debt of £1459 5s. 2d., treated as the separate debt of Edward Smith handed to E. B. Smith and Co., for collection has with the knowledge and privity of Edward Smith, been, as against the bankrupt, collected long ago; and Edward Smith, for aught that appears to the contrary may (if so entitled as against E. B. Smith and Co., as his agent), call upon them for payment of that sum. I am of opinion, therefore, that the claim of Edward Smith to retain the deeds of 22nd April 1875, as a security for the repayment of the £1459 5s. 2d., as the equitable assignee of that debt, as a debt due to D. F. Kemp and Co. from the bankrupt, fails altogether. I am of opinion that with the privity, if not by the direction of Edward Smith, that debt of £1459 5s. 2d. (if really due to Kemp and Co.) was transferred to and became an asset of E. B. Smith and Co., and that as between that firm and the bankrupt, the debt was by the subsequent dealings carried on by Edward Smith himself in the name of the firm of E. B. Smith and Co. with the bankrupt, as shown by the accounts, been extinguished upon the principle of Clayton's case, which in my opinion applies to the transactions treating the dealing subsequent to June 1875, as dealings between the firm of E. B. Smith and Co. and the bankrupt, with the privity of Edward Smith. But apart from, and independent of this view of the case, I am of opinion that though the deeds of 22nd April 1875, have been skillfully prepared so as to be good upon the face of them, yet, as the purpose for which they were prepared is now made manifest, they were void in their inception as securities given for the payment of what might be due thereafter upon gambling transactions. The relief therefore asked for by the notice of motion as to the deed of 22nd April 1875 must be granted. As to the acceptance for £380 given by Farrar, that stands upon the same footing. Edward Smith, in his examination before the registrar, says he claims to hold it as equitable assignee of Kemp and Co.'s debt. That debt, if it ever existed, has (with Edward Smith's privity) been extinguished, and forms part of the balance of £8302 5s. 2d., which has been abandoned as a debt provable against the estate; and that acceptance was therefore taken and held by Edward Smith without value, or the consideration has been satisfied by the subsequent extinguishment of the debt by means of the subsequent dealings between the bankrupt and E. B. Smith and Co., with the privity and under the direction of Edward Smith. It appears that Edward Smith, as the holder of the bill, afterwards brought an action against the acceptor, and recovered judgment (suing in the name of E. B. Smith and Co.), and proved in his own right under the liquidation proceedings against Farrar. The acceptor treating a judgment recovered in the name of E. B. Smith and Co. as his own debt. It is possible that this proceeding may have been according to the truth of the case, and that Edward Smith may have been the same as E. B. Smith and Co., but I do not consider it necessary to solve the question, or penetrate the mystery, or look behind the veil, if there be one. It is enough to say that the judgment upon the acceptance has been recovered in the name of E. B. Smith and Co., by the act of Edward Smith himself, and that he cannot claim the benefit of that judgment, or the proof made upon it as against the bankrupt or the trustee as representing him, and the sums Edward Smith has received by way of dividend upon the proof must be treated as money received to the use of the debtor, and must be paid to the trustee. The cases of Grisewood v. Blane (21 L. J., N. S., 46, C. P.) and Nicholson v. Gooch (25 L. J., N. S., 134, Q. B.) establish that upon a sale of shares, where none are delivered or intended to be delivered, as was the case here, but differences only are intended to be paid, the case is a wagering transaction, and void under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, and any security given for money to become payable upon such transaction would be void, and ordered by a court of equity to be delivered up to be cancelled: (See Fisher on Mortgages, pl. 377, and the authorities cited, note t.) The laboured attempt of the respondents in this case to put a false colour on the transaction as well as the character of the transaction itself makes it the duty of the court to order that the respondents pay the costs. When acting under advice the respondents deliberately abandoned their claim to prove against the bankrupt's estate for the £8302 5s. 2d., and thereby saved themselves from submitting to a public examination as to their dealings with the bankrupt, the court might reasonably have expected that such a claim as now set up by Edward Smith to be regarded as equitable assignee of the item of £1459 5s. 2d. as an existing debt due to D. F. Kemp and Co., would not have been attempted, because it has made it the duty of the court to inquire into and consider the character of transactions, which, considered as transactions of an insolvent trader, are unparalleled (in this court at least) in their enormity as offences against fair trading and commercial honesty—the extent and nature of which benevolent patriots are unwilling to believe.

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.

Thursday, March 20.

(Before PERBONET THOMPSON, Esq., Judge.)

Re CHESTERS.

Bankruptcy Act 1869, rule 262—Appointment of receivers.

THIS was a question as to the jurisdiction of the court to remove a receiver of its own appointment in favour of one chosen by a majority in value of the creditors. The debtor was a costumer in West Derby-road, Liverpool, and his creditors principally were Manchester warehousemen. On the debtor presenting his petition he, in conjunction with a creditor, made application for a receiver to protect his property, there being an execution on the premises, and Mr. Bolland was chosen, and upon his personal undertaking to be answerable in damages the court restrained the execution. Immediately afterwards the Manchester creditors nominated a Mr. Hunt, of their city, receiver, and applied to the court to confirm the appointment.

HIS HONOUR ruled that the creditors' right to nominate a receiver arose only where the court had not appointed a receiver, and accordingly refused to displace its own receiver.

From that decision an appeal was made to the Chief Judge, but he, without expressing any opinion on the question, remitted it the court below, on the ground apparently that it was not ripe for his decision, although the whole matter had there been fully discussed.

Atkinson, of Manchester, now appeared, and argued that the policy of the Act was to hand over to creditors the management of their debtors' property, and although there was some inconsistency in the rules on the point of substituting the creditors' nominees for its own receiver the court ought to give effect to the wishes of the creditors.

Seddon Smith, for Mr. Bolland, the receiver appointed by the court, contended that where it had appointed a receiver the creditors' right to nominate one was gone; but assuming it was not, their nomination required the confirmation of the court, and it would be an anomaly for the court to displace its own nominee for that of the creditors without some good and sufficient cause. Here the gentleman proposed was a Manchester accountant, and could it be said that a small estate in Liverpool could be better protected by him than a gentleman living on the spot? Further, the creditors, since the matter was originally before the court nearly two months ago, might have vested the property in their own accountant, but they had declined to exercise their right, and were therefore entitled to no consideration. A receiver was a mere creature appointed to protect the estate; and so long as he discharged his duty faithfully the interests of the creditors were preserved. Their time for action was at the first meeting, when, irrespective of the court, they could appoint whom they thought fit to administer the estate. The present application was one made purely in the interest of the Manchester accountant, and he should resist it to the utmost, as if acceded to it would tend to encourage a system of touting which had brought discredit upon the present Act, and for which the proposed Bankruptcy Bill had provided a remedy.

His HONOUR, after taking time to consider the question, delivered judgment as follows: This is a renewed application on behalf of certain creditors of the debtor for an order to substitute their nominee, Mr. Hunt, an accountant, of Manchester, as receiver of this estate, in the place of Mr. Bolland, an accountant in Liverpool, the receiver appointed by this court at the commencement of the proceedings. The application is made under the last clause of rule 262 of the Bankruptcy rules 1870. That rule provides that a trader shall state in his petition the estimated amount of the debts owing by him to his creditors; and where no receiver or manager has been appointed by the court, a majority in value of such creditors may nominate and appoint a receiver or manager. Then follow further provisions, not material to the present question, except so far as they contain indications of the rule having been drawn with reference to draft rules differing from the rules as they now stand. I refer to the words "such nomination paper," no nomination paper having been previously mentioned or provided for, and the words "according to the form in the schedule"—there being no such form in the schedule referred to. After which the rule ends with the direction that "if any receiver or manager has been appointed by the court, the nominee of the creditors shall be forthwith substituted in his place, and the court shall order accordingly." Now it is to be observed that neither the rules nor the statutes contain any provision for the nomination by the creditors of a receiver where a receiver has already been appointed by a court; but if the words under consideration are to be taken as empowering the creditors to nominate another receiver to be substituted in the place of the receiver already appointed by the court, then I think that in the absence of any provision empowering a portion of the creditors to bind the whole body of creditors, instances of which are found in this rule, and in sub-sects. 7 & 8 of s. 16 of the statute of 1869, where a majority in value of all the creditors, or a majority in value of the creditors present personally, or a majority in number and three-fourths in value of the creditors present have respectively the power of binding the whole body—the nomination ought to be by the whole body, and not as in the present case by a portion only. But if, notwithstanding the apparently imperative words of the provision, the court is to be allowed to exercise a discretion as to the application of the provision, I think it inexpedient in the present to make the substitution asked for. It was admitted on the argument that no exception could be taken to Mr. Bolland's fitness for the office of receiver. From his appointment on the 20th Jan. to the present time, he has had possession of the estate, which is in Liverpool, and, as Mr. Hunt lives in Manchester, if he were to be substituted for Mr. Bolland, his necessary visits to this town of Liverpool would entail considerable additional expense, without the slightest compensating advantage. Under all the circumstances, I think it right to refuse to accede to the application for the displacement of Mr. Bolland.

SALFORD COUNTY COURT.

Wednesday, March 21.

(Before Mr. J. A. RUSSELL, Q.C., Judge.)

Re JAMES IRVING.

Bankruptcy Act 1869, sect. 96—Examination of debtor—Default on part of debtor.

Cobbett appeared for the bankrupt.

Storer for the trustee.

Cobbett said the circumstances under which the matter came before the court were as follows: The petition was filed on the 18th July 1876, and at the first meeting of creditors the ordinary resolutions were passed, and also a resolution for liquidation by arrangement. It was further resolved that the debtor be granted his discharge upon the trustee and committee of inspection certifying to the court that such discharge should be granted. On the 30th Oct. the debtor was accordingly discharged, on the recommendation of the committee and the trustee. But on the 2nd, in the present year, the trustee, Mr.

Kerr, made an application in writing to the court, asking that a summons might be issued for Irving to come before the court for examination. Upon that application the summons was issued, but he (Mr. Cobbett) recommended the bankrupt to decline to answer any questions upon the following grounds: Mr. Kerr in his affidavit said he was informed and believed that the debtor had not disclosed to him, as trustee, the whole of his estate and effects, nor the whole of his books, papers, and documents. Mr. Kerr also said that he believed the debtor, after filing his petition, or within a short time of it, received debts which he had not accounted for, and that he believed the debtor ought to be summoned in the interest of the creditors. He (Mr. Cobbett) submitted that the application made by Mr. Kerr must state shortly the facts upon which it was grounded, which it did not do, and that it must not simply state the conclusions drawn from facts which were not stated. The 96th section of the Bankruptcy Act, under which the summons was taken out, showed that the court might, on the application of the trustee, at any time after the order of adjudication, summon before it the bankrupt and his wife. This had to be read with the 171st rule, which said that every application to the court under sect. 96 should be in writing, and should state shortly the grounds upon which the application was made. The rule went on to say that where the application was not made on behalf of the trustee the grounds upon which it was made should be verified by affidavit. That, he (Mr. Cobbett) contended, meant that where a trustee made the application it should be sufficient if he certified facts to the court; but that where it was made by any other person it must be certified by affidavit. It was not sufficient for a trustee, after a man had received his discharge, to come and state certain conclusions which he had drawn from facts not revealed by him to the court, and to ask the court to issue a summons to bring him up for examination. There was a very good reason why the facts should be stated to the court, for it could then judge whether the application was frivolous or substantial. He cited the case of Harding v. Smith (9 Jurist, p. 777), and the judgment of Lord Westbury in the case Ex parte Alexander (32 L. J. 5, Ch.), in which his Lordship said that it was intolerable that upon mere abstract statements of supposition or suspicion people should be summoned before a court. The rule in force at the time of Lord Westbury's judgment was amended in the Act of 1869, and extended to the bankrupt himself, as well as to third persons. Mr. Cobbett further argued that until the trustee had asked the debtor for the information he wanted, and had been refused, there was no authority in the court to issue a summons or to bring the debtor up and have him examined. In support of this contention he cited the case of Bennett, ex parte Glave (L. Rep. 1 Ch. D. 315).

His HONOUR said the last case cited seemed to him to cover the ground entirely. The important part of it was that a debtor had a right to be heard on the summons. A person could not come to the court and get an order against a debtor to appear for examination without his having had an opportunity of being heard. The court must determine whether he had been guilty of default before it could issue a process against him.

Storer contended that this was contrary to the ordinary practice; but after a lengthened argument, his Honour decided that he was bound by the case cited by Mr. Cobbett, and remitted the matter to the registrar (Mr. Hulton), who sat for the purpose of hearing the affidavits filed in support of and against the summons, and also to decide whether the bankrupt had made default.

After hearing the arguments, the registrar said that if all the affidavits had been before him at the time he should not have granted the summons, and that there was no evidence of the debtor having made default. The summons was therefore dismissed, with an order for the costs of the first application.

MERCANTILE LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

GUARANTEE—SEPARATE PAYMENTS—GIVING TIME IN RESPECT OF ONE PAYMENT—DISCHARGE OF SURETY.—Where a surety guarantees a series of payments to be made at stated periods, if time is given to the principal debtor in respect of one payment by a binding agreement, the surety is discharged from liability in respect of that payment, but not in respect of future payments. Defendant was surety under a bond for payment by D. to plaintiffs of money becoming due under a contract by which payment was to be made within the first fourteen days of each month, unless plaintiffs by writing signed by their secretary allowed a longer time. D. made default in one payment, and after the fourteen days had expired plaintiffs' secretary wrote to D., enclosing a promissory note payable one month after date, and stating that if he signed it time would be given. D. signed and returned the note. Held (affirming the judgment of the Common Pleas Division), that time had been given to D. in a manner not within the agreement, and therefore defendant was discharged as to the payment for which time had been given. Held (reversing the judgment of the Common Pleas Division), that defendant was not discharged as to the subsequent payments: (Croydon Commercial Gas and Coke Company v. Dickinson and Pollard, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 135. Ct. of App.)

MARITIME LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

COLLISION—RULE OF THE ROAD—SHIP IN STAYS.—When a vessel in tacking misses stays, she is bound to manœuvre in such a way as to come under command again as soon as possible, so as not to embarrass an approaching vessel by remaining in an unmanageable condition. A vessel on the starboard tack close hauled approaching another apparently on the port tack, is, nevertheless, bound to keep out of the way, so soon as she ascertains the other vessel is unmanageable and unable to obey the ordinary rule of the road at sea. Semble, when a vessel is in stays or unmanageable, it is her duty to apprise an approaching vessel of the fact: (The Lake of St. Clair v. The Underwriter, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 155. Priv. Co.)

CONSIGNMENT—SHIPPING—REFUSAL TO ACCEPT—MEANING OF "TO BE SHIPPED"—DATE OF BILL OF LADING.—Defendant bought of plaintiff 600 tons of rice, to be shipped during the months of March and April, per Rajah of Cochia. The 600 tons were in 8200 bags, only fifty of which of which were put on board in March, the rest being shipped in February, whereupon defendants refused to accept: Held (reversing the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench), that this case was undistinguishable from Alexander v. Venderne (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 530), and that there had been no breach of the contract to ship the goods: (Shand v. Bowes, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 161. Ct. of App.)

CHARTER FOR A STATED TIME—DETENTION BY ORDER OF BOARD OF TRADE—REFUSAL OF CHARTERER TO ACCEPT.—The charterer of a vessel chartered for a specified time, commencing on a named day who cannot have the vessel on the day agreed on, is entitled to cancel the charter. The plaintiff chartered a vessel of the defendant for twelve months from a named day; the vessel was detained by the Board of Trade for repairs, and was not ready for the plaintiff until two months after date. Held (affirming the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division), that time was the essence of the contract, and that the plaintiff was entitled to repudiate the charter: (Tully v. Howling, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 163. Ct. of App.)

COLLISION—DAMAGE—DOCK MASTER'S AUTHORITY.—NEGLIGENCE OF PERSON IN CHARGE OF THE SHIP.—When a vessel enters docks with the permission and under the general directions of the dock master, and within the space over which his authority by statute extends, those on board of her are bound to use diligence and care to carry out the directions of the dock master in such a manner as to avoid doing damage to other vessels: (The Cynthia, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 184. Adm. Ct.)

COUNTY COURTS.

BLOOMSBURY COUNTY COURT.

Monday, Feb. 26.

(Before G. LAKE RUSSELL, Esq., Judge.)

COSFORD AND OTHERS (trading as THE VIGO BRICK AND TILE COMPANY) v. THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Common carriers—Special contract—Owner's risk—Principal and agent.

Hensman for the plaintiffs.

Harmsworth for the defendants.

In delivering judgment in this case, which was heard on the 26th Jan., His HONOUR said: The plaintiffs in this case are the Vigo Brick and Tile Company, carrying on business at Northampton, and they sue the Great Northern Railway Company for £49 6s., for damage done to certain goods, a spur wheel, entrusted to the defendants as carriers, to carry from Boston to Northampton. In July last, the plaintiffs wanting a spur wheel, to replace one in some of their machinery at Northampton, gave an order to Messrs. Tuxford, the well-known implement manufacturers at Boston, to make it. The wheel was made by them, the price being £49 6s., and it was delivered by Messrs. Tuxford to the railway company at the Boston station about the 23rd Aug. last, and a proper officer of the company signed what is called, I believe, a delivery note, a copy of which tators to laugh at better men than themselves? Does it put itself foremost in the agitation for uniting the two branches of the law, and for opening to solicitors a reasonable avenue of advancement? Can we find out that it even protests against the wrong done to us when the "solicitorships" of the State department are given not to solicitors but to barristers? Has it, in fine, done—is it doing—will it ever do, any one act which entitles it to the respect and support of the great body of the solicitors of the Supreme Court?

J. J. BRITTON.

Maidenhead.

PRESSURE ON THE SUPERIOR COURTS.—That something must shortly be done to relieve the pressure on the Superior Courts is admitted, but what that something shall be is less easily determined. One new judge is to be appointed (there was a rumour that seventeen new judges were required) with, or without, a staff, at chambers; but the addition of one judge to the judicial body is obviously inadequate to supply the want which still continues. In truth, "the block" is more likely to increase than diminish just in proportion as the Judicature Act becomes more efficient in its operation. The difficulty of the situation seems to be that the immediate success of that Act must infallibly lead to its ultimate failure, because, if the object of its promoters be accomplished, and litigation be rendered simple and inexpensive, it must necessarily be largely augmented, and will thereby get beyond our present judicial strength. This is what in a certain measure has already occurred, and hence "the block." In this state of things the obvious remedy is that recommended by the commissioners prior to the passing of the Act, and which was, it is believed, in accordance with the views of the great lawyer and statesman who now occupies the woolsack, viz., the partial or entire localisation of actions and suits. That this natural and plain course has not been pursued long ago can only be accounted for by the tenacity with which we adhere to our ancient usages until compelled perforce to abandon them. The system of localisation has prevailed throughout Europe for more than a century, to the satisfaction of all classes, and there is no good reason why it would not work equally well in this country. So far as they have been tried, the County Courts have exercised the extended powers conferred on them since 1845 with complete success. From the returns supplied to Parliament for the year 1876, the number of plaintiffs were 878,493, exclusive of equity and bankruptcy. The amount sought to be recovered was £2,817,449. Of this enormous number 17,305 were for sums exceeding £20, in every one of which the parties were entitled ex debito iustitiae to appeal; and no doubt in a great number of the cases where the sum in dispute was below £20, the judges, if required, would have granted a case, yet the total number of appeals amounted to no more than 49. These figures show unmistakably that the extension of the jurisdiction of these local courts has worked thoroughly well and has conferred a great benefit on suitors. The Bill now before Parliament, introduced by Sir Eardly-Wilmot himself, formerly an experienced judge, affords an admirable opportunity for the further extension of this principle, and in a way that seems quite unobjectionable. The Bill is at present meagre, simplex munditiis, containing no preamble and only one clause, which authorises a plaintiff to sue in the County Court, whatever be the amount of his claim, reserving to the defendant the right to have the plaint removed to the Superior Courts on his giving security for the extra costs. As the law stands the plaintiff may do this at present, if the defendant consent; but the "if" mostly proves an insurmountable barrier, as the defendants never do consent, trusting to the chapter of accidents to avert the threatened litigation, rather than by consenting to rivet it upon themselves. Yet the advantages of localising the action are immense, especially to the unsuccessful party on whom the burden of costs ultimately falls. In addition to the ordinary costs, consisting of court fees, advocate's fees, &c., there are the costs and charges of witnesses, and these are enormously aggravated when the trial is removed and may be hundreds of miles from the place where parties and witnesses reside. Even at the assizes it is no uncommon event for witnesses to be detained several days, all which time they must be paid and maintained at the expense of the party who requires their evidence. It is no exaggeration to say that all this delay and expense, or nearly all, are spared where the action is tried in the neighbouring County Court. I have already trespassed too far on your indulgence to examine further into this point at present, but with your permission I will endeavour in a future letter to furnish you with a few statistics which, if I am not mistaken, will satisfy you of the deep interest the public have in the localisation of action and suit.

ONE ACQUAINTED WITH LOCAL COURTS.

COUNTY COURT SCALE OF COSTS.—In the February number of the County Courts Chronicle, and in the LAW TIMES of Feb. 17 last, page 285, a County Court case of Brown v. Dodds is reported, in which the scale of costs directed to be framed by the 8th section of the County Court Act 1875, is judicially impugned by the judge of the Sunderland County Court as ultra vires, and not to be followed because it overrides the express provisions of the 91st section of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. In the next number of your journal kindly insert this letter, in which the scale of costs is ministerially supported as intra vires, and to be relied on because it is framed under the express provisions of the County Court Acts 1875, and is in conformity with the provisions of the County Court Act 1846. It is an Easter offering made in and for the general interest of the Profession which you represent and watch over in all its branches. The following are the allegations of ultra vires that the scale is charged withal: That it professes to get rid of the provisions of the 91st section of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. That the committee of judges have provided in the scale for fees to counsel, where less than £5 is recovered, and made professional costs to depend upon what the plaintiff chooses to claim and not on what he recovers. With regard to the first of these charges it will be seen on reading the scale, that so far from professing to get rid of the provisions of the 91st section of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, it actually imports the same into its wording and adopts the very fees prescribed thereby, and declares the same to be applicable and allowable as well between party and party as between a solicitor and client. In respect of the second and twofold charge, it would appear that the judges who have from the first entertained doubts in respect of the scale, and now make or concur in the making of these charges of ultra vires, do not know the contents thereof, and that their examination of the scale has been most unsound. For the first part thereof is entitled "A scale of costs and charges to be paid to solicitors in actions under £20, as well between party and party as between solicitor and client," and fees to counsel are not nominated in this first part of the scale, and each gradation in the first part of the scale has a prefix, or heading thus: "In actions where the amount recovered exceeds 40s., and does not exceed £5, or exceeds £5 and not £10, or exceeds £10 and not £20." And the judges cannot find the name of counsel, or the nomination of counsel's fees, in this first part of the scale: or that professional costs are made to depend on the amount the plaintiff chooses to claim; it is not in the scale. But, on the contrary, fees and costs are only allowed in actions where the amount recovered exceeds 40s. and not £5, £5 and not £10, £10 and not £20. So much for the accuracy of the charges of ultra vires. They should only have been made on grounds more relative than these. For the latter two have no existence in fact, and the first which remains will, it is hoped, be dispelled by the decisions, arguments, and observations yet to be advanced in support of the scale, as being both in its origin and formation intra vires. In this behalf, attention is directed to the 8th section of the County Court Act 1875, which expressly enacts, "That the judges of the County Courts appointed, or to be appointed from time to time, to frame rules and orders for regulating the practice of the courts and forms of proceeding therein, under the 3rd section of the County Court Act 1836, shall be empowered to frame a scale of costs and charges to be paid to counsel and attorneys with respect to all proceedings which are now, or shall hereafter be authorised to be taken in such courts, and from time to time to amend such scale, and such scale or amended scale certified under the hands of such judges, or any three or more of them, shall be submitted to the Lord Chancellor, who, from time to time, may allow or disallow, or alter the same, and the scale or amended scale so allowed or altered, shall or from a day to be named by the Lord Chancellor be in force in every County Court." In pursuance of which the committee of judges have framed the consolidated orders and rules for regulating the practice of the courts, and the forms of proceeding therein, and also a scale of costs and charges to be paid to counsel and attorney with respect to all proceedings which are now or shall hereafter be authorised to be taken in such courts, and the same has been allowed by the Chancellor, and from the 2nd Nov. 1875 it has been in force in all County Courts. And the appropriate formation abundantly appears in the accurate language employed in the headings and items of the Scale, e.g., the first heading is, "In actions where the amount recovered exceeds 40s., and does not exceed £5." And the first item is, "Instructions for and preparing particulars of demand for an ordinary summons (such particulars to be signed by the solicitor), and attending and entering plaint, 3s." And seeing that particulars of demand are one of the forms prescribed by the Consolidated County Courts Order, Rules and Forms of 1875, and required on the institution of an action or proceeding in a County Court, and the same is preliminary to and independent of the appearing and acting in court (which is provided for by the Act of 1846), and 3s. costs is allowed to an attorney with respect to such proceeding, which is now authorised to be taken in such courts; it is submitted that such first item, and the fee allowed is clearly intra vires, and expressly authorised by the 8th section of the Act of 1875. The second item is "Attending or acting in court" (9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 91). This fee is authorised and prescribed by the 91st section of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, and it is proposed to set out every clause thereof seriatim interspersed with such legal decisions as have been pronounced thereon; and such observations as may tend to elucidate and assist the construction thereof. In the first clause it is enacted that, "No person not being an attorney admitted to one of Her Majesty's superior courts of record shall be entitled to have or recover any sum of money for appearing or acting on behalf of any person in the said court. And no attorney shall be entitled to have or recover therefor any sum of money, unless the debt or damage claimed shall be more than 40s., or to have or recover more than 10s. for his fees and costs, unless the debt or damage claimed shall be more than £5, or more than 15s. in any case within the summary jurisdiction of this Act." This clause of the section was first judicially construed by the Court of Queen's Bench in Re Clipperton (12 Jur. 1044, and 12 Q. B. 168, when Lord Denman, C.J., Pattison, J., Wightman, J., and Erle, J., were of opinion that the Legislature did not intend to make any distinction between an attorney's right to recover from the opposite party, and from his own client. It was again construed by the Court of Common Pleas in Re Goodman in the case of Keighley v. Goodman, where Wilde, C. J., Colman, J., Maule, J., and Cresswell, J., held that the fees and costs prescribed thereby were limited to appearing or acting in court, and did not apply or extend to preliminary or subsequent work done out of court; and that such work was properly and fairly recoverable against the client. And this holding was followed by the Court of Queen's Bench in Re Toby (12 Q. B. 16). The second clause of the section prescribes the fee to be allowed to barristers thus: "And in no case shall any fee exceeding £1 3s. 6d. be allowed for employing a barrister as counsel in the case." This clause allows only one absolute and arbitrary fee of £1 3s. 6d., and no mention is made of the case in which such fee is to be allowed except in the third and last clause, which is a general one, thus: "And the expense of employing a barrister or an attorney, either by the plaintiff or defendant, shall not be allowed on taxation of costs in the case of a plaintiff where less than £5 is recovered, or in the case of a defendant where less than £5 is claimed, or in any case unless by order of the judge." This clause is a general one for subjecting the allowance of the expense of employing a barrister or an attorney to the order of the judge. But as it mainly relates to the barrister, and for the first time prescribes the alternative cases in which his fee may be allowed, and the language of the concluding part of the clause is not "or in either case," which might have limited the attorney to the same cases, and the expression being "or in any case," apparently contemplates and refers to the prior cases in which the attorney's fees were already prescribed, it may be supposed that the intention was only to control the same by the order of the judge, and not to preclude the allowance of such fees in the cases prescribed. And in confirmation thereof the decision in Re Clipperton is again referred to in respect of the nature and intention of this clause. For the Court of Queen's Bench were of opinion "that the costs intended to be allowed between party and party in regard to attorneys are all such costs as such attorneys are entitled to recover from their clients, and that the latter part, which requires the order of the judge for the allowance of such costs, as between party and party was meant as a further check against the unnecessary employment of attorneys, but does not limit and control the preceding part of the section," which prescribes the fee of 10s. in the case aforesaid. All the three clauses have now been set out in order, and with the punctuation employed in the 91st section, and on reference to the section it will be seen that such clauses are disjunctive and independent clauses, and since it has been held that the last clause does not limit or control the preceding parts of the section, it would appear that the expense of employing a barrister or an attorney, at the fee and in the cases specified, are as of right in the case of a plaintiff, where not less than £5 is recovered; and in the case of a defendant, where not less than £5 is claimed, and as of grace in respect of the attorneys in cases where the debt or damage claimed exceeds 40s. and not the re-enactment of previous legislation dropped per incuriam, and an amendment of the law of evidence as part of judicial procedure. But the answer that the proposed law would be an exceptional law connected with an institution of vast influence, and in the main fairly worked, was fatal. That it has been found impossible to punish the greatest libeller of the present generation, is no reason for passing a penal law affecting all honest men who happen to occupy the same position of owners of newspapers.

DURING last year ninety-four members have joined the Barristers' Benevolent Association, and donations to the amount of £121 ls. were received or promised. The total amount of donations received is £3232 10s., the whole of which has been invested. The annual subscriptions during the past year amounted to £852 3s., being an excess of £169 over the subscriptions of 1875. The committee are apparently well satisfied, but the result is out of all proportion to the wealth of the Profession.

EITHER there was or was not an intelligible reason for allowing plaintiffs to lay their venues wherever they please, and this being recognised Masters and Judges ought to require a very strong case to be made in support of applications to change them. How much trouble and expense may be caused by letting the balance of convenience be adjusted on conflicting affidavits against the election of the plaintiff, is illustrated by Provord v. Langton, which came before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE and Mr. Justice MELLOR in the Queen's Bench Division on Wednesday. The Master had refused to change the venue from Middlesex to Manchester. Baron CLEASBY rescinded this order and changed the venue. The Court has now reversed this order, and the venue remains where it was laid by the plaintiff. Mr. Justice MELLOR had considerable doubt; but surely, where there is doubt, the plaintiff's statute right ought to have great weight. This is a practical question of very great importance, for at the present time no small amount of ingenuity is required to select a venue where there is some chance of getting to trial. If this selection is roughly upset defendants may thereby get the advantage which legal maladministration gives them—the advantage of indefinite delay.

The decision of the Court of Appeal, on the 11th inst., in the case of The Duke of Devonshire v. Barrow Haematite Company, throws some light upon the Rating Act 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 54). The plaintiff in the case was the lessor, and the defendants the lessees, of certain mines. In the lease the defendants covenanted to pay rent "free of all rates, taxes, &c." All mines, except coal mines, were free from rates at the date of the lease. Subsequently mines of all kinds were made subject to rates, but it was provided by the 8th section that when any local rates which, at the commencement of the Act, any lessee of a mine is exempt from being rated to in respect of mines, becomes payable by him during the continuance of his lease, he may, "unless he has specially contracted to pay such rate in the event of the abolition of the said exemption," deduct from any rent one half of the amount of rate. After the Act was passed the defendants deducted one half of the rates paid by them from the rent. It was urged on behalf of the plaintiffs that they were not justified in doing so, inasmuch as they had covenanted to pay the rent "free from rates," which amounted to such a specific contract to pay the new rate as was required by sect. 8 of the Rating Act 1874. The Queen's Bench Division gave judgment for the defendants, and that decision has been upheld in the Court of Appeal. If the words of the section and the covenant in the lease are placed side by side, the grounds upon which the decision was based are intelligible. The specific contract contemplated by the section must be made distinctly with the view to the happening of a certain event, namely, the abolition of an exemption. The words of the covenant are framed in a general way, and could only be taken to refer to circumstances existing at the time it was made.

The Common Pleas Division decided a question of some practical importance with reference to the lien of solicitors, in the General Share Trust Company (Limited) v. Chapman (36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 172). The plaintiffs claimed certain cheques from the defendant, a solicitor, who replied that he was entitled to retain them under a lien for costs. It appeared that the defendant was retained by a shareholder in a company to take proceedings in respect of certain shares. The share certificates were deposited with the former as security for costs. The plaintiff company afterwards bought the shares in question, and retained the defendant with notice of his lien. The defendant, in pursuance of his retainer, gave up the certificates to the liquidator of the company, and received cheques in exchange. The plaintiffs claimed these cheques, but the solicitor refused to deliver them up until the costs due from the shareholder, none of which had been paid, were received. The Court decided that the plaintiffs could not recover until the lien was satisfied. "The only interest," said

The Law and the Lawyers.

THE design of Mr. WADDY'S Newspaper Registration Bill was undoubtedly good, but it is impossible to be blind to the dangers which may attend upon the imposition of severe penalties upon persons owning newspapers who might not comply with the stringent provisions of that measure. At present, in a civil action, it is possible by interrogatories to find out who is the proprietor of a newspaper. But Mr. WADDY says this is not enough—it is desirable, for the purposes of summary criminal proceedings, that the proprietor's name should be registered. He was careful to disarm criticism by stating that what he proposed was merely

Mr. Justice ARCHIBALD, who delivered the judgment of the court, "transferred to the plaintiffs was an interest subject to the lien already created upon the shares, of which it is admitted the plaintiffs had notice, and the fact that the defendant accepted from the plaintiffs a retainer as attorney to recover the amount for them, does not necessarily amount to an abandonment of his lien, or entitle the plaintiffs to have the amount recovered without first satisfying the defendant's claim." An express reservation of lien is not necessary.

THE decision of the House of Lords in Fletcher v. Rylands (L. Rep. 3 H. of L. Cas. 330) has been followed by a host of others, in which the attempt has been made, with more or less success, to render the defendant liable for consequences alleged to be due to the fact that he has brought upon his land materials from whose presence danger of some sort or another was to be expected. In the recent singular case of Humphreys v. Cousins (36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 180) the plaintiff and the defendant were occupiers of adjoining premises. A drain which passed under the plaintiff's house began under the defendant's, whence it passed under other houses, then came back to the defendant's premises and passed thence to those of the plaintiff. It got out of order under the defendant's premises, and a quantity of sewage and water escaped into the plaintiff's premises, doing the damage for which the action was brought. The defendant was ignorant that the drain returned to his premises, and that it was out of repair. At the trial before Mr. Justice Blackburn the jury found that the injuries were caused by water and sewage coming into the plaintiff's cellar from the defendant's premises. They also found that the defective state of the drain was not attributable to any negligence of the defendant. Such were the facts and findings, and upon them Mr. Justice Denman and Mr. Justice Lindley gave judgment for the plaintiff. The court first distinguished the case from those in which the water or other matter comes naturally from or through the defendant's land on to the plaintiff's premises. That distinction being established, it lay upon the defendant to show his right to allow the sewage and water brought on his land artificially to run off on to the premises of the plaintiff. "The prima facie right," said the court, "of every occupier of a piece of land, is to enjoy that land free from all invasion of filth or other matter coming from any artificial structure on land adjoining. He may be bound by prescription or otherwise to receive such matter, but the burden of showing that he is so bound rests on those who seek to impose an easement upon him." A reference was made to Broder v. Saillard (L. Rep. 2 Ch. Div. 692), in support of the plaintiff's right of action. There the occupier of a house was held liable, by the Master of the Rolls, for allowing the continuance on his premises of certain artificial works which caused a nuisance to his neighbour, although it had been put there before he took possession. The court also cited the statement of the law by Mr. Justice Blackburn in Hodgkinson v. Ennor (4 B. & S. 241), as containing the true doctrine. "I take the law," said his Lordship, "to be as stated in Tenant v. Goldwin (2 Ld. Raym. 1089), that you must not injure the property of your neighbour, and consequently if filth is created on any man's land, then, in the quaint language of the report in Salk. 361, 'he whose dirt it is, must keep it that it may not trespass.'" In the case decided by the Master of the Rolls, his Lordship said, with respect to inflowing water there complained of, "however it comes, if it comes through an artificial work which collects it, in the nature of a large artificial sponge, which absorbs it and keeps it together until it oozes out by reason of the nature of the sponge, it appears to me I have to say that an artificial work, a work made by man, is a work which if it cause a nuisance is a thing for which the owner of the land is responsible."

A COMPARISON of a recent American decision (Webb v. Sachs), upon the law of fraudulent preference, with our law upon the subject, is rather instructive. The case in question came before the United States District Court of Oregon. At the trial it appeared that a debtor whose assignee was plaintiff in the action, had been adjudged bankrupt on the 5th May 1876, upon the petition of certain creditors. On the 6th March 1876, and previously, the debtor kept a store, and was the owner of a farm. On the 9th Dec. 1875, he gave a promissory note to the defendants in payment of a large debt that had been due several years. The note was payable one day after date. Proceedings were taken against him upon the note, and he confessed judgment in March, on the 14th of which month the defendants issued execution, seized and sold the debtor's goods. At the date of the confession of judgment, the debtor was indebted to various creditors to a far greater amount than the value of his stock. The defendants were aware of this fact, and hence they urged the debtor to confess judgment, so that they might have security. The debtor's assignee brought the present action to recover the amount received by the defendants as the proceeds of the sale. The learned Judge directed the jury that to entitle the plaintiff to succeed he must prove that on the 6th March the debtor was insolvent, and "that he procured his property to be seized by the defendants with intent to prefer them over his other creditors," and that the defendants had reasonable cause to believe the debtor was insolvent, and that they knew the seizure was made in fraud of the Bankrupt Act. The Judge's direction to the jury went to some length, but it will be sufficient to notice it briefly. The first point taken was the debtor's insolvency. He was insolvent if he was unable to pay all his debts in money as they became due in the ordinary course of business. In the second place, a confession of judgment by an insolvent debtor is an act which may, according to the circumstances of the case, amount to a fraudulent preference. Thirdly, an intention to prefer may be presumed when such debtor knows his insolvency. Every person must be taken to intend the necessary and natural consequences of his acts. The Judge then considered the rules relating to the belief and knowledge of the creditor. The assignee in bankruptcy cannot recover from a preferred creditor the property or its value obtained by means of such preference unless the creditor accepted the preference with a reasonable cause to believe the debtor to be insolvent. By reasonable cause of belief was meant knowledge of such facts and circumstances in regard to the matter in question as would put a prudent man upon inquiry. Assuming, however, that the defendants took the preference with such knowledge, they were not liable to the plaintiff unless they knew the confession of judgment was made in fraud of the Bankruptcy Act—that is, unless they knew that it was contrary to the provisions of that Act. Hence a payment by an insolvent person of one of his creditors in full, so far as such payment prevents an equal distribution of the insolvent debtor's property amongst his creditors, is necessarily an evasion of the Act, and therefore a fraud upon it. Further, if the act of the debtor was not in the usual and ordinary course of business, then there is prima facie evidence of fraud, and it is incumbent on the creditor to rebut that presumption. The jury found for the plaintiff. Space will not permit us to compare this case step by step with decisions of our own courts of law, but such of our readers as are fond of comparing and contrasting legal principles may take an interest in comparing the direction of the Judge in the above case with the principles laid down in Butcher v. Stood and similar decisions.

INTERROGATORIES for the examination of an opposite party may be delivered, as a matter of right, at any time not later than the close of the pleadings, and at any other time, by leave of the court or a Judge; so says Order XXXI., rule 1. But in Mercier v. Cotton (35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 79), and in Disney v. Langbourne (Ibid., p. 301), the Courts held that the words above, "at any time, &c.," mean, as a general rule, not until both parties have stated their cases in their own way by filing their statements of claim and defence. So much for the limitations imposed by the exponents of the New Rules upon discovery as a matter of right. In a motion before the Divisional Court of Common Pleas (Ellis v. Ambler), an attempt was made to impose a limitation upon discovery when sought after the close of the pleadings, "by leave of the court or a Judge." The facts of the case were these: An action was brought by a solicitor to recover his costs, and he sought to establish his employment by a middleman. By some clerical error, or omission, the plaintiff filed his statement of reply, and joined issue upon the defence, thereby closing the pleadings, without having delivered his interrogatories. Ten days later he applied to GROVE, J., in chambers for leave to deliver interrogatories. It was refused, because no sufficient reason was shown for the delay. On appeal the Court (DENMAN and LOPES, JJ.) considered that the Judge in chambers had a discretion in such cases, which had been rightly exercised in this instance. They refused to establish a practice that an application for leave to interrogate at the stage in question must be accompanied by an affidavit, or that the court or Judge will look at the questions desired to be put; and they refused to hear the case upon its merits. No doubt in the present case the decision was a just one. But we venture to think that this is exactly the sort of case in which equitable doctrines are of immense service. The doctrine applicable is this, that a party coming into court to ask for its intervention must begin by putting himself right. In this case, it might have been necessary to commence a fresh action in order to obtain the required discovery. That is a severe penalty to impose upon a suitor because his counsel has been too busy to draw interrogatories, or his solicitor has let the time for delivering them pass by. Such misconduct deserves some penalty, but not the penalty of a nonsuit, which a refusal to give discovery might amount to. We would suggest that in such a case the party should be permitted to put himself right by offering to pay the costs of the summons for leave to serve interrogatories, and that that is the real measure of damages to his opponent. Of course, if the court saw in the delay an attempt to gain time, it would know how to prevent such an abuse of its process. Perhaps the reason for this sort of inelasticity of the common law procedure is to be found in the fact that every cause comes before many different Judges in its passage through Westminster Hall, each one of whom feels himself bound to follow strictly the routine, whilst a Chancery Judge acts independently. With regard to the refusal in the case before us to allow interrogatories, we may quote the shares to the person so named: (Masted v. Paine, second action, L. Rep. 6 Ex. 132.)

A jobber who has contracted to purchase shares may only assign his liability to a substitute on the implied condition that at the appointed time he pays the purchase-money, and gives the name of his substitute. If he fail to produce a name, according to the usage of the Stock Exchange, he becomes the ultimate purchaser, and must himself take the shares and register them in his own name: (Grissell v. Bristowe, L. Rep. 4 C. P. 49.)

The nominee of a jobber on the Stock Exchange must be a person open to no reasonable objection, subject to the objection being taken by the vendor within ten days from the account day: (Masted v. Paine, second action, L. Rep. 6 Ex. 132.)

The custom of the Stock Exchange relieves the jobber from all responsibility as to the solvency of the ultimate purchaser, whose name he passes, and throws the duty of making inquiries upon the transferor: (Masted v. Paine, second action, ubi sup.)

The name that the jobber passes must be that of a person capable of contracting, and the giving in the name of an infant as the ultimate purchaser of shares is not a fulfilment of the jobber's contract: (Merry v. Nickalls, L. Rep. 7 Ch. 733; 3 E. & L. 530.)

When a jobber on the Stock Exchange "takes in" shares for another who has contracted to purchase them, and the vendor's brokers allow him to hold over the name of the purchaser till demand, he assumes the obligation, independent of the custom of the Stock Exchange, of offering a name to the vendor to which no reasonable objection can be made; and if he does not fulfil that obligation, he must indemnify the vendor against calls: (Allen v. Graves, L. Rep. 5 Q. B. 478; 39 L. J. 157, Q. B.; 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 677.)

That the person whose name has been passed by a jobber as the ultimate purchaser of shares is a foreigner resident abroad is prima facie a reasonable objection to him: (Allen v. Graves, ubi sup.; Goldschmidt v. Jones, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 220.)

A jobber who passes the name of a person as the ultimate purchaser of shares, who is not, at the time of its being passed, under any agreement to buy or to allow his name to be passed, will be liable to indemnify the vendor against calls paid by him through the non-completion of the transfer: (Masted v. Paine, first action, L. Rep. 4 Ex. 81; Masted v. Morris, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 535.)

When a bought note of shares expresses them to have been bought of a particular jobber, that is not evidence of a contract on the part of the jobber that the transfers shall be in his name, or that he has or will have any such shares, but only of a contract that he will procure a transfer of such shares to the purchaser: (Taylor and another v. Stray, 2 C. B., N. S., 175, 197; 26 L. J. 185, 287, C. P.)

AGENCY—RIGHT OF AGENT TO COMMISSION—WHEN HIS AUTHORITY HAS BEEN DULY EXECUTED. (a)

THE right of an agent to commission for his services depends upon a variety of circumstances which it will be necessary to examine in detail. This right may be derived from an express contract between the principal and agent, from a legal custom, or from an implied contract. It is part of the general law of contracts, that where there is an express contract between the parties neither can resort to an implied one inconsistent with the express one. Expressum facit cessare tacitum is the rule. Hence it follows that, as a general rule, where the contract between the principal and the agent is an entire contract, the latter can recover no remuneration upon a quantum meruit, but must recover the whole amount agreed upon or nothing: (See Outter v. Powell, 2 Sm. L. C. and cases cited in notes). The right to recover may also be similarly controlled by custom: (See Read v. Rain, infra).

Turning to the circumstances under which an agent may claim commission, it will be seen that the claims may be made under any of the following circumstances:—

- (1) The authority may be duly executed.
- (2) It may be only partially executed.
- (3) It may not be executed.
- (4) It may be so executed that the agents' services are useful to the principal.
- (5) The act authorised may be illegal.
- (6) The authority may be revoked before execution (a) By act of principal. (b) By death of principal.

The amount to which an agent is entitled will, in the absence of a contract or custom be fixed by a jury.

When the authority has been duly executed the agent is entitled to his commission unless the services performed are illegal.

The question whether the authority has or has not been executed is, of course, one which must be decided by a reference to the facts of each particular case. The test to be applied in such cases is supplied by asking whether the agent has performed all the services for which he was employed. If the agent has done everything he was bound to do, then it is immaterial, in the absence of a contract or custom to the contrary, so far as his right to commission is concerned, that his services have been fruitless, whether this result is brought about by the conduct of his principal or by that of third parties. In the following cases the agent was held to be entitled to recover because he had performed all he had undertaken to do. These cases must not be confounded with the cases in which, by reason of the principal's interference, the agent is prevented from carrying out his authority.

In Lockwood v. Levick (8 C. B., N. S., 603), decided in 1860, the plaintiff, a commission agent, was employed by the defendant, a manufacturer, to procure orders for him upon the terms contained in a written proposition as follows: "We sell at your terms, and have no further interference with the account beyond forwarding the order and references. We give you all the information we possess, and you treat the order as coming direct from the buyer. We expect to receive our commission on all goods bought by houses whose accounts are opened through us." The plaintiff introduced to the defendant a dealer who gave an order for a large quantity of web. The defendant accepted the order, and undertook to execute, but for want of adequate machinery he was unable to complete, and the order was ultimately withdrawn. The plaintiff thereupon claimed the amount to which he would have been entitled if the order had been executed by defendant at the trial. There was conflicting evidence as to the right of the plaintiff to recover under the circumstances. The jury found that the commission was payable when the order was accepted, and that it did not depend upon whether it was executed or not. A rule was subsequently granted to enter the verdict for the defendant, if the court should be ultimately of opinion that the learned Judge at the trial had misconstrued the contract, or for a new trial. The rule was discharged.

Erle, C.J. said: "It is urged on the part of the defendant that it would be unreasonable that he should be held liable to the payment of a commission upon an order which yielded him no profit. But here he had an opportunity of making profit. The plaintiff performed all the service for which he was employed, and the defendant had the option of delivering the goods and so making a profit. But I do not agree that the profit to the manufacturers is to be the criterion of the agent's right to commission." This view of the law, that the agent's rights are not affected by the loss or gain to his principal upon any transaction is strictly in accordance with equity and justice. The principal must be taken to know his own business best, and if he makes a miscalculation he has no more right to visit it upon the agent than he has upon his butcher or baker.

Lara v. Hill (15 C. B., N. S., 45), decided in 1863, was an action for commission for sale of an advowson. The plaintiff was employed by the defendant to sell an advowson upon the terms mentioned in a circular in which it was stipulated that the commission should become due and payable upon the adjustment of terms between the contracting parties in every instance in which any information had been arrived at, or any particulars had been given by the plaintiff's office, notwithstanding the business might have been taken off the books subsequently. It was further stipulated that no accommodation that might be afforded as to time of payment or advance should retard the payment of commission. A contract of sale was arranged through the plaintiff's agency. It was duly executed and a deposit paid on the 14th Oct. 1862, the residue of the purchase money being payable on the 31st Dec. The court held that the plaintiff was entitled to his commission at all events on the 31st Dec. although the full purchase money had not been then paid.

Green v. Lucas (31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 733, affirmed 33 ib. 584), one of the most recent cases, was decided in 1876. The defendant authorised the plaintiffs who were mortgage agents to procure for him on loan the sum of £20,000 upon the security of certain leasehold property at 6 per cent interest, and undertook upon their obtaining that or any other amount agreed upon, to pay them a commission of £2 per cent. upon the amount so procured by them, and a survey fee of £105. Three days before this agreement was entered into, the defendant furnished the plaintiffs with two valuations of the property, each of them setting the value at about £37,000. One of them assumed that the lease "contained no arbitrary or restrictive clauses, but only the usual covenants." Relying upon these valuations, the plaintiffs applied to a society for a loan. The directors agreed to advance it, "subject to the title and all other questions proving to be satisfactory." When the lease was examined, it was discovered to contain a proviso which prevented the directors advancing the money. The plaintiffs thereupon brought their action, and the jury found in their favour. A rule to enter the verdict for the defendant or to enter a nonsuit was discharged by the Court of Common Pleas, whose judgment was upheld by the Court of Appeal. In the court below, Lord Coleridge based his opinion upon the authority of Prickett v. Badger (1 C. B., N. S., 296) and Green v. Barlett (32 L. J. 261, C. P.) holding that the defendant was liable to pay a reasonable remuneration, inasmuch as the plaintiffs had done all they were bound to do, but the negotiation had gone off in consequence of the defendants having concealed a material fact.

In the Court of Appeal the Lord Chancellor (Cairns) said: "It appears to me that the plaintiffs had done everything which

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

Inquiries, as to Students' Societies, as to the several Examinations, as to Admission on the Roll of the Supreme Court, as to being called to the Bar, and as to taking out and renewal of annual certificates, should be addressed to the Editor (Students' Department).

A LAW STUDENT calls our attention to the fact that the Master of the Rolls has decided, in reference to sect. 3 of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, that articles of clerkship are not assignable. This is certainly a startling announcement, for not only are assignments of common occurrence, but the Stamp Act of 1870 provides for "assignment of articles of clerkship," which requires a 10s. stamp. Moreover, in all suitable publications a form of assignment of articles will always be found. A careful reading of the section and other provisions in the Act, however, seem to warrant the decision of the Chancery Division in Ex parte Adams (10 L. Rep. Q. B. 227), which was followed by the Master of the Rolls in a more recent case. Sect. 5, however, contemplates an "assignment" under certain circumstances, but not so as to alter the construction of sect. 3, which, when read by the light of section 13, seems to make the view of Sir George Jessel not only intelligible, but the only one which can reasonably be adopted.

THE following lectures and classes in Common Law are appointed to be delivered and held in the Hall of the Incorporated Law Society, Chancery-lane, during the ensuing week: Monday class 4.30 to 6 o'clock p.m.; Tuesday, ditto; Wednesday, ditto; Thursday, Lecture, 6 to 7 o'clock p.m. Subscribers are not admitted to the hall after lectures have commenced.

THE general rules and regulations as to the several examinations prior to admission on the roll of solicitors, and as to taking out and renewal of annual certificates, issued on the 2nd Nov. 1875, provide in effect "that if any solicitor of the Supreme Court, after having at any time taken out a stamped certificate, shall, for the space of a whole year from and after the expiration thereof, have neglected to renew the same for the following year, or has failed to obtain such a certificate within twelve months from the date of his admission on the Roll, the registrar shall not afterwards grant a certificate to such solicitor, except under an order of the Master of the Rolls, and for the purpose of obtaining such an order the applicant shall, six weeks before the application is intended to be made, give notice thereof as in the case of an original admission, and the affidavits in support of such application shall be filed at the Petty Bag Office, and a copy thereof shall at the same time be left with the clerk of the Petty Bag, to be delivered by him to the Registrar of Solicitors, and the order for such taking out or renewal, shall (if made) be drawn up on reading such affidavits, and an affidavit of such copies having been left and notices given. Upon an application to dispense with the required notice of intention to take out or renew a certificate, a summons must be served on the Registrar of Solicitors calling on him to shew cause within ten days why such taking out or renewal of certificate should not be allowed; and if no cause be shown to the satisfaction of the Master of the Rolls, he may make an order for allowing such certificate to be issued."

EASTER EXAMINATION, 1877.

GENERAL EXAMINATION OF STUDENTS OF THE INNS OF COURT, held at Lincoln's Inn Hall, on the 22nd, 23rd, 24th, and 26th March, 1877.

The Council of Legal Education have awarded to the following Students certificates that they have satisfactorily passed a public examination: Bennett, F. A. Ker, Hon., Inner Temple; Blackburn, W., Inner Temple; Blackwell, P. T., Inner Temple; Brown, L. M., Inner Temple; Chamberlayne, W. C. I., Middle Temple; Cooper, C. J., Lincoln's Inn; Corbett, J. S., Middle Temple; Coward, J. C. L., Gray's Inn; Cripps, C. A., Middle Temple; Davids, T. W. E., Middle Temple; Farfan, J. F. A., Inner Temple; Fillan, T. T., Middle Temple; Flanagan, J. W., Lincoln's Inn; Gray, H. L., Lincoln's Inn; Green, E. G., Middle Temple; Green, F. T., Inner Temple; Hart, H. W., Inner Temple; Hemphill, S. C. J., Middle Temple; Hewlett, R. W. #### DEWSBURY, WAKEFIELD, AND DISTRICT LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

THE second ordinary meeting of this society was held on Thursday, the 29th of March last, at the Town Hall, Wakefield. Samuel Bruce, Esq., barrister-at-law, presided. The question for the evening's discussion was as follows: "Can a contract within the Statute of Frauds be wholly waived and abandoned before breach by a subsequent agreement not in writing?" Mr. Marks and Mr. L. R. Walker supported the affirmative, and Mr. Beaumont and Mr. Lister the negative. After a lengthy discussion the chairman summed up and put the question to the meeting, when it was, with the chairman's vote, decided in the affirmative. A hearty vote of thanks to the learned chairman terminated the proceedings.

THE LAW STUDENTS' DEBATING SOCIETY.

THE following is the quarterly report of the Hon. Sec., John Indermaur, Esq.:

In compliance with rule 15 of your society I beg to make the following statement of the society's proceedings during the past quarter.

The quarter has comprised twelve meetings, at which four legal and six general questions have been discussed. One of such evenings was devoted to the business of the society, and the other of such meetings was adjourned on account of the very small attendance, vide infra, seven.

Twelve members have been elected during the quarter, and five have resigned, and seven have been struck off the rolls for non-payment of fines and subscriptions under rule 8; and I have much regret in announcing the death of Mr. Kenrick (of the firm of Roote, Kenrick, and Co.), an old and valued member of the society, who in past years has held various offices in it. There are now on the rolls of the society 229 members.

The average number of members attending the meetings has been twenty, the highest number has been thirty-two, and the lowest seven. The average number of speakers has been ten, and of voters thirty-two, of which latter an average of eleven voted in person, and

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

BANKRUPTCY LEGISLATION AND BANKRUPTCY REFORM.

The following observations, by Mr. Motteram, Q.C., judge of county courts, and Mr. Sebastian Evans, Barrister-at-Law, have been recently issued:—

DIFFICULTIES IN THE WAY OF BANKRUPTCY LEGISLATION.

These difficulties arise in a great measure from the temptation to fraud which besets so many of those interested in the property of an insolvent debtor. Only too frequently the debtor endeavours to appropriate to himself that which in justice belongs to his creditors, or to favour certain creditors at the expense of others; creditors endeavour to secure the payment of their own particular debts, regardless of the interests both of the debtor and the other creditors, while some of those professionally employed in realising the estate are by no means always above resorting to devices for increasing their own emoluments at the expense of debtor and creditor alike. Even where all concerned are honest, many difficulties remain. Men of business, to whom time is money, in many cases, as a more matter of economy, prefer writing off a bad debt to incurring the trouble and expense of securing a doubtful dividend. In many cases, also, they are anxious not to publish their losses to the world, and still more anxious not to publish the fact that such losses are of sufficient importance to themselves to induce them to take any great trouble to diminish them.

All of these difficulties must ever stand in the way of any bankruptcy legislation; but there are others, created by the present state of the administration of the law, which cannot be removed by any reform which does not involve, to some extent at least, an alteration if not a partial reconstitution of the tribunals as well as of the mode of procedure for adjudicating in bankruptcy cases, and administering the bankrupt's estate.

DEFECTS OF THE PRESENT SYSTEM.

With regard to the defects in the present bankruptcy law and the mode of its administration, the report presented in July 1875, by the committee appointed by the Lord Chancellor to consider the question, and the supplementary report of Mr. Parkyns, the auditor general in bankruptcy, call especial attention to the abuse of the system of appointing proxies and the expense attendant on the proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act now in operation, but they lay less stress on the inadequacy of the provisions against fraud and preferential payments, and the absence of any really effectual provision for the proper audit of accounts, which are among the most signal defects of the Act of 1869. In fact, the reports altogether understate the evils of the present system and the vicious practices which have grown up under its protecting shadow. As matters at present stand, the expenses of administering a bankrupt's estate are greater, and as a necessary consequence, the dividends to creditors smaller than they ever were. No practically efficient check really exists either against the frauds of dishonest debtors or the rapacity of dishonest receivers and trustees. If any evidence were wanted to prove this, is it not to be found in the fact that the amount of unpaid dividends now in the hands of trustees, which if not in the pockets of the creditors ought to be multiplying in the hands of the State, may be counted by hundreds of thousands of pounds?

It is needless, however, to insist on the many and various evils of the present system. All, or nearly all, ultimately resolve themselves into a single one. Under the existing law the creditors are allowed to create for themselves an extra-legal officialism, which is not clothed with any adequate authority or responsibility, and is practically unchecked by any proper supervision. (a) The management of proceedings in bankruptcy or insolvency by these means becomes a lucrative employment in the hands of a newly-created class of extra-legal officials, whose interests are not those of the debtor, the creditors, or the State, but simply their own.

The results of the license thus allowed are to be read in the history of a vast number of cases, year by year becoming more numerous, in which the trustee and certain classes of creditors, sometimes assisted by the debtor himself, contrive to play into each other's hands at the expense of the more careless or more scrupulous creditors.

PRACTICAL PRINCIPLES.

These being the difficulties in the way of bankruptcy legislation and the evils of the present system, what are the practical principles which should guide the efforts of the Legislature in the direction of bankruptcy reform?

(a) The report of the trustee and the present audit by the receiver of the court, and the subsequent audit by the auditor-general, is not satisfactory.

Too much officialism in dealing with bankrupt and insolvent estates has more than once already broken down as completely as too much licence allowed to the creditors.

A certain amount of officialism, we think, is necessary in the interest of the creditors themselves, in order to ascertain and secure their rights, which experience has shown they will not do for themselves. On the other hand, in the interest of the State, a certain amount of licence to creditors, combined with stronger inducements to look after their own interest than can at present be brought to bear on them, is also necessary in order to prevent Courts of Bankruptcy from being overburdened with an army of officials paid for by the State, at an expense out of all proportion to their utility. What is required, in fact, to bring the law into a state of stable equilibrium after its many oscillations, is so to adjust its provisions as not not to take the management of the creditors' affairs out of their own hands, but at the same time to introduce sufficient official supervision to secure certainty in the proceedings, honesty in the conduct of them, and authority to enforce decisions arrived at in conformity with the law; in short, a fusion of officialism with proper licence to creditors, in which neither will preponderate, but each assist and control the other.

The suggestions we desire to make to effect this object are not of a sweeping character. They are made with a view not by any means of repealing the Act of 1869, but of rendering it really effectual in its working, so that its provisions may operate fairly to the debtor and beneficially to the creditors.

In theory, indeed, the principle of the Act appears to us distinctly sound, although the carrying out of the principle in practice has resulted in a failure so gigantic that the worst system of officialism would be preferable.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS.

Before proceeding to consider the necessary alterations in the procedure under the Act to render the working of it effective, we wish to make a few general observations on the bankruptcy law as it now exists.

In the first place, we see no good reason why the distinction between traders and non-traders should be preserved; all who are insolvent and unable to pay their debts should, generally speaking, we think, be treated alike.

Secondly. The distinction between executions amounting to £50 and executions exceeding that amount might with advantage, we submit, be abolished. The course of procedure with regard to executions above £50 is, we apprehend, the one most consistent with the interest of the general body of an insolvent's creditors, as placing it in their power to bring back into the insolvent's estate the property seized under the execution, provided within a certain number of days from the date of the levy the execution debtor shall be adjudicated bankrupt.

Thirdly. We would recommend that all bills of sale should be invalid which are not registered and in respect of which the money is not advanced at the time of the execution of the instrument, and registration should not, in any case, be permitted after ten days from the date of execution.

The frauds that are committed on bona fide creditors by means of bills of sale, and the amount of money belonging to the bankrupt's estate that is wasted in contesting them, would be incredible to persons not intimately acquainted with these matters.

Fourthly. Preferential payments, again, present a most promising field for the exercise of legal ingenuity, and as a consequence, large sums, which ought in justice to be employed in paying dividends to creditors, are consumed in litigation.

With respect to this subject, the law, as declared of late years, has been singularly in favour of the preferred creditor, and against the body of the creditors generally; so much so, indeed, that it is difficult now to avoid any preferential payment when it has originated under the auspices of, and the operations with regard to it have been conducted by, persons possessing any legal experience in these matters.

Even if the tide of legal decision had not of late so strongly set in favour of the preferred creditors, we think it would, nevertheless, be to the interest of the general body of creditors that all payments made by an insolvent, otherwise than in the ordinary course, or in the way of his trade (if a trader), should be rendered void, provided the payments are made within a certain period of time—say a month—of bankruptcy.

Fifthly. The law with respect to "reputed ownership" is also in a very unsatisfactory state, and in its operation frequently works injustice upon innocent and unsuspecting persons. When it was first introduced into our law it was intended to prevent traders obtaining fictitious credit by surrounding themselves with property apparently, though not really, their own. Of whatever advantage this might have been at the time it first became law, it can be but of slight, if, indeed, of any advantage now. At the present day nobody is really deceived, who does not choose to be so, by such appearances, and so many exceptions, since trade has been conducted on different principles, have been introduced and ingrafted upon the law, that it is questionable whether it would not be better to strike it out of the bankruptcy code altogether; our own opinion is that it would. How strange it seems to the non-legal mind, that a barge on the river Thames in the reputed ownership of a bankrupt, with the consent of the real owner of it will not pass to the trustee of the bankrupt's estate on the bankruptcy, whilst the furniture in the possession of the bankrupt of which he is the reputed owner, with the real owner's consent, will pass to the trustee. We know the reason alleged for this difference is that the custom to let barges on hire is notorious, whilst, it is said that the custom to let furniture on hire is not so notorious; but is this really the present day any valid reason why one person's property—whatever may be his profession or trade—should be taken to pay the debts of another, simply because he has allowed another to have them in his possession, on hire or on loan, at the time of his bankruptcy? It is not so in the case of a non-trader—why should it be so in the case of a trader?

Sixthly. We see no good reason why an insolvent should not be allowed to present a petition to the Court of Bankruptcy for an adjudication against himself, thereby seeking its protection for himself and his property, which, on the presentation of the petition, should become immediately vested in an officer of the court in the manner hereinafter pointed out.

Seventhly. All petitions for liquidation of every kind, as they now exist, should be finally abolished. It is, we think, essential that all proceedings in the Court of Bankruptcy should be simple, alike in character, and, as far as possible, carried on by the same machinery, and this whether the adjudication is obtained on the petition of the debtor himself or of the creditor, which of course should be allowed to continue as at present. Out of court, though under its sanction as hereafter proposed—but only for the purpose of giving to the proceedings validity, and all parties to them complete security, by judicially deciding at the outset upon the sufficiency of the instrument by which the composition is proposed to be carried out—we would allow arrangement by composition between the insolvent and his creditors. All arrangements between creditors and the insolvent would thus be reduced to bankruptcy on the insolvent's own petition, or on the petition of his creditors, or composition under the sanction of the court as above explained. No other form of arrangement should be permitted, except by letters of license, which might continue as at present; but in all cases where the property of the debtor is to be transferred from himself for the benefit of his creditors, the proceedings, so far as the custody of the estate and the funds to be derived from the realisation of it are concerned, should, we submit, be under the supervision of the court, although the mode of realisation and the management of the estate should be directed and governed by the creditors themselves.

On the presentation of a petition for adjudication by the insolvent himself, his property would become immediately vested in the court, but on a petition at the instance of a creditor praying for an adjudication against the insolvent, the property should vest only on adjudication.

OFFICIAL TRUSTEE.

In order to carry out these important alterations, it would be necessary to create a new office at some of the County Court circuits or districts. The holder of this office might be called the "official trustee" of the court, and the appointment, we think, should rest with the County Court judge of the district. His duties should be performed at the County Court, and his remuneration, which should be in the shape of a salary, and not of fees, should be not less than £1000 or £1200 a year, which would, we think, be sufficient to attract candidates of ability, and to secure their integrity so far as an adequate salary can secure it.

In this officer should become vested the books, papers, and the whole of the insolvent's estate, at the time and in the manner before stated. He should in all cases be the receiver of the insolvent's estate, and under the direction and with the sanction of the court, should, as such receiver, take all steps necessary for the protection of the property until a meeting of the creditors is held, and the creditors have resolved in what way the insolvent shall be dealt with, and his property realised or made available for their benefit.

PROCEDURE.

Under the proposed system, the course of proceeding would be according to the Act of 1869, except where the modes we propose would be inconsistent with it.

revolutionary experiments. It has been our aim to introduce the least possible alteration in the law consistent with rendering it thoroughly efficient, to simplify its provisions, and to adapt the methods of procedure to the needs of debtor and creditor alike of the trading and non-trading communities. Absolute finality is not to be looked for in legislation, more particularly in a department like that of bankruptcy law, which affects so many individuals continually on the watch to detect its flaws and to evade its provisions; but we venture to believe that the consolidation of the amendments we have suggested with those portions of the existing law which have been proved by experience to work satisfactorily in practice, would render any further change unnecessary for a far longer period than the lifetime of any previously-adopted system.

BANKRUPTCY DECISIONS IN THE YEAR 1876.

ACT OF BANKRUPTCY.

A TRADER applied to his brother, who had previously advanced him £890, for a further advance. The brother refused to make any advance without security, whereupon the trader promised to give him a bill of sale of all his property to secure both his past and fresh advances, if he would advance £150. The brother then advanced £150 at once, and on two subsequent occasions advanced two further sums of £50, but the bill of sale was not executed till the day when the third £50 was advanced. The bill of sale was expressed to be a security for the £950, and any further advance that might be made. Sums to the amount of £100 were subsequently advanced by the brother, and within a month after the execution of the bill of sale the trader was adjudicated a bankrupt.

Held (reversing the decision of Bacon, C.J.), that the £150 must be treated as a fresh advance, and that having regard to the substantiality of that advance, and to the bona fide intention to enable the debtor to continue his business, the bill of sale was not an act of bankruptcy.

Where a debtor assigns all his property to a creditor to secure a past debt as well as a fresh advance, the fresh advance, if a substantial one, prevents the assignment from being an act of bankruptcy, just as effectually as the omission of a substantial part of the debtor's property from the assignment would do. But it depends upon the circumstances of each case whether the advance is substantial or not: (Ex parte King, re King, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 466).

The jury having awarded £5000 damages against the co-respondent in a suit for divorce, the Divorce Court ordered the co-respondent to pay that sum to the husband, the latter undertaking that he would immediately on receipt thereof pay it into the registry of the court to abide the further orders of the court.

Held, that there was not a good debt to support a petition in bankruptcy by the husband against the co-respondent.

Per Cockburn, C.J.—The order does not create a sufficiently good petitioning creditor's debt. The award of damages by the jury with an order of the court giving effect to the verdict of the jury, would not of itself form a ground of action, or constitute a good petitioning creditor's debt. In order to constitute such a debt you must have that which may be the immediate subject of an action at law, or you must have a judgment capable of being enforced by execution: (Ex parte Muirhead, re Muirhead, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 303.)

ACTION BY TRUSTEE.

In an action brought by debtors before their insolvency and the filing of a petition for liquidation under the Bankruptcy Act 1869, the trustee appointed under the liquidation was called on to elect, under sect. 142 of the Common Law Procedure Act 1852, whether he would continue the action and give security for costs, and he declined to continue the action and give such security, and it was Held, by the Exchequer Division, that the trustee was not thereby estopped from subsequently bringing a fresh action against the same defendants for the same cause of action.

Per Cleasby, B.—The debtors themselves would be barred from bringing another action, because the fact of the cause of this action having been the subject of a judgment would be a complete answer to any fresh or future action by the same parties for the same cause, but the trustee of an insolvent debtor does not simply represent the debtor: (Bennett v. Gamgee, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 764).

MR. B. SHAW, the junior counsel for the respondents in the Eidsdale appeal, died on Sunday, after a few days' illness.

THE names of Mr. Cotton, Q.C., Mr. Little, Q.C., and Mr. Butt, Q.C., are connected with the new judgeship.

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE PROFESSION.

NOTE.—This Department of the LAW TIMES being open to free discussion on all professional topics, the Editors do not hold themselves responsible for any opinions or statements contained in it.

DEFAULT SUMMONSES IN THE COUNTY COURTS.—Your correspondent "Subscriber" objects very properly to the delay he points out in obtaining judgment. Unfortunately for the County Courts they have always been behind the Superior Courts. For example, the large improvements by the Common Law Procedure Act 1852, soon after their establishment, and directly after the present most important improvement of sect. 1, to give judgment after sixteen days, the Judicature Act gave the same in the High Court in eight days. The most desirable amendment, I submit, would be to reduce the County Court time also to eight days; but I cannot agree with your correspondent in seeking to require defendant's affidavit of defence just at present, nor, as I read the Act of 1875, and rules, does there appear much reason for such a serious change. The practice referred to by your correspondent, of the judge giving time at the so-called hearing of a default summons, is not, so far as I know, followed in any metropolitan court. I disputed the judge's power in one court last year, and I believe it now to be settled that a defendant who appears on the hearing, after giving notice of defence to a default summons, and then admits the debt, in part withdraws his defence, and the plaintiff has a right to the judgment forthwith, as directed by sect. 1, unless he thinks proper to consent to any other order. The costs to a defendant giving such notice of defence are certainly increased by the expenses of witnesses, solicitor, and perhaps counsel attending the court, although the court fee on an admitted debt is the same as judgment by default without notice of defence.

G. MANLEY WETHERFIELD.

SOLICITORS' AGREEMENT UNDER 33 & 34 VICT. c. 28, s. 4.—With reference to the specimen digest of the law relating to solicitors of the Supreme Court appearing in your journal, I wish to call attention to the second paragraph appearing in your issue of March 31, which says in effect, quoting 33 & 34 Vict. c. 28, s. 4, that wherever an attorney or solicitor has made an agreement in writing with his client respecting the amount and manner of payment for the whole, or any part of any past or future services, fees, charges, or disbursements, in respect of business done or to be done by such attorney or solicitor, whether as attorney or solicitor, or as an advocate or conveyancer, by a gross sum, &c., &c., the agreement is liable to taxation. Is this correct? The first part of sect. 4 of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 28, seems only to enact that the remuneration of attorneys and solicitors may be fixed by an agreement, and then there is a proviso that when any such agreement shall be made in respect of business done, or to be done, in any action at law or suit in equity, the amount payable under the agreement shall not be received by the attorney or solicitor until the agreement has been allowed by a taxing officer of a court having power to enforce the agreement. Is it to be understood from this that agreements for any sort of work done are liable to taxation, or only where an agreement is made with reference to work done, or to be done, in respect of an action? VIGORNIA.

[The true position was not precisely stated in the paragraph to which you refer. Sect. 4 provided as you suggest, but other sections, notably sects. 8, 9, and 10, appear to render almost nugatory the principal aim of this Act, and bear out the view stated in the digest.—ED.]

DUCHY OF CORNWALL SALES.—Complaints have from time to time been made in your columns of solicitors for vendors inserting in their conditions of sale that they will, for a certain charge, furnish the purchaser with a deed of conveyance. It is, no doubt, a reprehensible practice, and which is seriously at variance with the usual custom which has been from time immemorial in vogue that the purchaser's solicitor should prepare the conveyance. If it is objectionable among solicitors, I fail to see why the law clerk of the Duchy of Cornwall should be at liberty to adopt it, and should tout for practice and interfere with the rights and privileges of the purchaser's solicitor, and insist on a right to prepare the conveyance; and yet this is what is done at the Duchy sales, as you will see by the enclosed particulars. The condition, besides being objectionable, is misleading, as anyone would suppose that under the Act it was imperative the conveyance should be prepared as mentioned; whereas the Act contains nothing of the kind. At the sale in question it was asked if a gentleman prepares his own conveyance will he escape the payment of the fees? to which it was replied, "No." The matter is one not worth making a fuss about, yet it is one which ought not to pass unnoticed. The conveyance, as eventually prepared, was nine folios in length, for which a solicitor's charge would have been £1 5s. for instructions, drawing, and engrossing, and yet the charge made was £12 12s., exclusive of stamps. ### Queries.

144. COPYHOLD—SURRENDER.—A., the owner of a copyhold estate of inheritance in fee simple, surrenders the same to B., by way of mortgage, to secure a principal sum and interest, and his wife joins to release her dower or freebench. The surrender contains a condition for redemption of the estate, on payment of principal and interest. According to the custom of the manor, where the husband is seized in fee of a copyhold estate during his intermarriage, his wife, after his death, is dowerable in a fourth part thereof. The mortgagee has sold the estate, and he and the mortgagee are about to surrender to the purchaser. The question is whether the wife of the mortgagor is a necessary party to the surrender. F. W. H.

145. CORPORATION—LETTING LAND.—It is a rule of law, that a corporation can only bind itself by deed, is an agreement for letting land under the seal of a local board, which is a corporate body, and in which the word "agree" instead of "covenant" is used, valid as a deed, and would such an agreement require a 10s. stamp, although the rent reserved is under £50, which, between ordinary parties, would only require a 5s. stamp? SUBSCRIBER.

146. SECT. 15 OF BANKRUPTCY ACT.—Can any of your readers refer me to any case explaining the word "tools" in sect. 15, sub sect. 2, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Would it include in a liquidation, carts, carting, or trucks? ARTICLED CLERK.

147. RIGHT TO SUE FOR PROPORTION OF TITHE RENT.—A. B., an outgoing tenant, leaves his farm on the 25th March, the half year's tithe rent charge is due on the 1st April following, and is paid (under notice of distress) by C. D., the incoming tenant. Can any of your readers point me to a decision of one of the Superior Courts on the right of C. D. to sue A. B. for the proportion of tithe up to the 25th March? Can it be said that tithe was either legally or equitably due from A. B., on the 25th March, so as to come within the 14 & 15 Vict., c. 25, s. 4? S. T. E.

148. BANKRUPTCY.—I should be glad of the opinion of some of your readers on the following: Two debtors, in partnership, filed a petition under sects. 35 and 36 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, and, at the first meeting of creditors held therein, the creditors then assembled resolved, by a special resolution, to wind up the affairs of the debtors by liquidation, and appointed a trustee, who realized the estate, paid the dividends, called a meeting of the creditors, and, by resolution, obtained his discharge, and closed the liquidation. The debtors not having their discharges, and being desirous of obtaining them, the question arises who is to call the meeting, and in case the meeting is called, and the discharges granted by resolutions, who is to make the report of the report of the proceedings to the court, as the trustee, whose place it is to do it, is released, and, therefore, I presume, anything done by him after his release would be of no avail. If the released trustee's report would not be sufficient, by what means can the debtors obtain their discharge, and, in the event of their not obtaining it, what would be the status of the debtors as regards any property of which they might become possessed? I presume the trustee, being released, could not claim it; nor the creditors, seeing that they have, by resolution at a meeting duly convened, closed the liquidation? J. J. H.

149. COPY WRIT ANNEXED TO AFFIDAVIT OF SERVICE—SIGNING JUDGMENT.—I observe in the last number of the LAW TIMES you say that it is not usual or necessary to annex a copy of the writ to affidavit of service. I can only say that in the district where I reside the district registrar positively refuses to enter up judgment unless copy of writ is annexed to the affidavit of service. I shall be glad if you or any of your numerous readers will inform me, through your columns, if the district registrar is justified in refusing to enter up judgment on the above grounds. APRIL 10, 1877.

A MANAGING CLERK. [So far as London practice is concerned, what we stated is certainly correct; it is not usual, nor is it necessary, to annex a copy of the writ of summons to the affidavit of service. It was necessary under the old practice, but now a copy of the writ is filed when process is first issued, and a second copy on the file would be a needless incumbrance. It is one of those many minor points on which the rules of the Supreme Courts are silent. We cannot say, therefore, that the registrar is wrong, but he requires that which is unnecessary. A new rule should be framed to meet the point. We presume you are charged the fee stamp for filing the copy writ.—ED. SOLS. DEPT.]

Answers.

(Q. 143.) BANKRUPTCY—MORTGAGEE.—Under the General Order in Bankruptcy of the former Bankruptcy Laws, the assignees, and not the mortgagees, would conduct the sale (Ex parte Cudron, 3 M. D. and De G. 302, V. C. K. B.; Ex parte McGregor, 4 De G. and S. 603), and I conceive that the practice is the same under the present law. The General Order in Bankruptcy, however, did not apply to equitable mortgages (as distinguished from mortgages of equitable interests), Ex parte Taylor, 18 Ves., 434; but I think that the trustee's solicitor would now be entitled to prepare the conditions of sale in the case of an equitable, as well as of a legal mortgage. he will be required. The object of the Chancellor should be to secure continuous sittings in London and Middlesex. To effect this, single judges should be sent the circuits assisted by commissioners, and relieved to a large extent by courts of quarter sessions. If this could be done, half the judges would be at liberty to sit during the circuits in London. We need hardly point out the probable effect which such sittings would have upon the cause lists. The proposal to substitute a single payment to the official referees, in lieu of the present exorbitant fees, is a good one, but the courts do not possess the confidence of the Profession, and will never be much resorted to. If the referees are directed to assist the Chancery masters the sphere of labour will be one for which they are peculiarly fitted.

It is singular that it should be so difficult to arrive at any agreement about legal education. The only explanation of this difficulty is to be found in a careful examination of the views of Lord SELBORNE and the Incorporated Law Society on the one hand, and Lord CAIRNS and the Inns of Court on the other. The former are not particularly anxious to deal tenderly with the Inns, and wish to see a School of Jurisprudence established, which would be open to everyone indiscriminately. Lord SELBORNE would make the study of law a matter of national importance, the Lord Chancellor and the Benchers think mainly of the Bar. Lord CAIRNS, without discussing the expediency of amalgamating the two branches, considers it desirable as matters stand that the education should not be in common. We are inclined to agree with him, not on sentimental but on practical grounds. There are now no glaring defects in the teaching or examination of the Incorporated Law Society or the Inns of Court. No man can now be called to the Bar without possessing a fair knowledge of Civil Law and English Law. The Universities give legal education to those of their members who desire it. The proposal to form a committee of thirty, composed of barristers, solicitors, and other persons, to control and supervise legal education, cannot be entertained. Either the matter must be altogether taken out of the hands of private societies, or they must be left to manage their own affairs. The great improvements which have recently taken place have deprived the question of much of its urgency, and the offer of Lord CAIRNS to take it into his own hands is a guarantee that no hasty or revolutionary measures will be attempted.

A CASE which was heard before the Queen's Bench Division, on appeal from the Justices of Breconshire (Edwards v. Trew), on the 18th inst., affords a very practical illustration of the powers of municipal corporations. This was a case stated by the above justices. From the facts stated it appeared that the appellant was the lessee of certain slaughter-houses under a local Act. He preferred an information against the respondent on Nov. 6, 1876, on the ground that the latter had slaughtered cattle in a slaughter-house other than that authorised by law. It is provided by sect. 19 of 10 & 11 Vict. c. 14, that no person shall slaughter any cattle for sale as human food in any place within the limits prescribed by the local Act other than a slaughter-house which was in use as such before and at the time of the passing of that local Act, and has so continued ever since, or the slaughter-house made in pursuance of the local Act. The 65th section of the local Act in question (25 & 26 Vict. c. 186), provides that "the company from time to time, if and when they think fit, and with but not without the consent of the corporation, testified by writing under the hand of the mayor or town clerk, may provide and maintain slaughter-houses, proper and sufficient or the slaughtering of cattle for the supply of the borough and its neighbourhood, upon such sites as they think expedient." In order to support the information, proof of such consent having been given was necessary. The only evidence offered was an unsigned resolution of the corporation, consenting to the erection of slaughter-houses by the company on a site mentioned, and a letter of the town clerk, dated May 15, 1863, containing a copy of the resolution addressed to the company's solicitor. The company afterwards, in 1871, removed the slaughter-house from the site mentioned to another place about a quarter of a mile distant. The question was thus raised, whether a sufficient consent had been given within sect. 65. This question again might be resolved into two, namely, the questions raised in the special case. First, was the copy minute a valid consent within the above section? Secondly, assuming that it was so, should the consent be considered an unlimited one, and would it extend to subsequent erections, and hence to the erection of 1871? The Court, consisting of Mr. Justice MELLOR and Mr. Justice FIELD, without calling upon the respondent's counsel, decided the case in favour of the defendant in the Court below. The ground upon which the learned judges went was, that a fresh consent of the corporation was necessary for the erection of any new buildings. Mr. Justice FIELD was clear that the corporation required to exercise its powers under sect. 65 judicially, and that such as that contended for would be valid.

judicial power. This is a cardinal rule in the law of delegation of authority. The corporation, as a sanitary body, had a duty to perform with respect to each and every slaughter-house built. If it assumed to grant an "unlimited consent," there would be an attempt to delegate a discretion entrusted by the Legislature. Such an attempt would be ultra vires. The Court having taken this view, there was no necessity to consider the first question raised in the case. We venture to think that, had that question been discussed, it would have been decided in favour of the respondent. The words of the section are conclusive. There must be a signature. Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes says, p. 334, "Where a statute confers a privilege or power, the regulative provisions which it imposes on its acquisition or exercise are essential and imperative." Thus, when an Act gave to the designers of prints the sole right of printing them for fourteen years after the date of publication, adding "which (days) shall be truly engraved with the name of the proprietor on each plate," it was held that the neglect to comply with this provision was fatal to the copyright (Newton v. Cowie, 4 Bing. 234). Again, on the authority of the Municipal Corporation Evidence Act 1870, s. 3, the unsigned resolution was not receivable in evidence without further proof. The utmost effect of the unsigned resolution would be this, that in the event of any question arising between the corporation and the appellant, or his lessor, the corporation would be estopped from denying the granting of a consent. In the present appeal the corporation was no party.

THERE are not wanting indications that the reforms introduced by the Judicature Acts will be advanced yet further in several directions. At the last meeting of the Law Amendment Society, Mr. GANFORD BRUCE introduced some proposals in which he advocated the extension of the jurisdiction which the registrar of the Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice, acting with the assistance of merchants, now exercises in maritime causes, to similar actions brought in other divisions of the High Court. The reasons upon which the proposals were based may be briefly summed up. In the Admiralty Division all matters of detail relating to the assessment of damages, or questions of account, are referred to the registrar and his assessors. In the common law divisions, where references were conducted before an arbitrator, there was, owing to the different practice, much delay in the progress of the business. The system adopted by the Admiralty had been, the speaker said, found to work better than that which he wished to see supplanted. The dispatch of business before the registrar and his assessors, it was urged, contrasted most favourably with the tediousness of an ordinary common law reference, although, as a rule, the amounts involved were less than those in cases before the registrar of the Admiralty Division. There seemed to the speaker to be no reason why suitors in maritime cases instituted in other divisions should not have the same advantages as suitors in such cases instituted in the Admiralty Division. Trial by jury, the speaker thought, although in general the surest and best method of arriving at the truth, was not always the best method for the determination of a particular case. So of the official referees; whatever might be their qualities, the present organised staff of the Admiralty Division should be the best for carrying on the work. In the discussion which followed the main question appears to have been, not whether any change was or was not desirable, but whether the changes should take the form indicated above, or whether they should be more radical, and transfer all maritime causes whatever to the Admiralty Division.

THE Judge of the Uxbridge County Court decided a case (Meeking v. Great Western Railway Company) of some interest on the 17th inst., with reference to the liability of railway companies for damage caused by fire issuing from their locomotives. The action was brought to recover £16 for damage to a crop of standing barley. From the evidence it appeared that on the evening of the 9th Aug. last, some dry grass and hedge trimmings on one of the defendant company's embankments was discovered to be on fire, soon after a train had passed. The flames quickly spread to the plaintiff's barley field, where damage was done to the amount claimed. It was alleged that the fire was caused by the emission of sparks from the engine as it passed. It was urged for the defence that, inasmuch as the railway company was properly incorporated, it could not be held liable for the damage unless actual negligence was proved. The Judge, who sat without a jury, found as a matter of fact that there was negligence in the company or its servants, which amounted to the same thing, and consequently gave judgment for the plaintiff with costs. The law is clear that the mere use of a locomotive engine authorised by the Legislature cannot be treated as a nuisance (R. v. Pearce, 4 B. & Ad. 30); nor will an action lie for injury done by the sparks, where there has been no actual negligence in the use or management of the engine. The mere use of the engine, it is said, is lawful, although such use is, in some respects, dangerous to the public or to neighbours. Hence damage by it is not necessarily actionable: (Vaughan v. Taff Vale Railway Company, 29 L. J. 247, Ex.) The negligence proved in the present case does not appear can set up a first charge against a second of which he had notice at the time of the purchase is thus a question of intention, and that intention would seem to depend mainly on the further question whether there was an express or implied obligation to indemnify the vendor, such implied obligation, or the absence of it, as in Adams v. Angell, being inferred from a consideration of the whole transaction and all the circumstances of the case.

IMPROPER CONVERSION OF TRUST PROPERTY— RIGHT TO FOLLOW PROPERTY.

THE recent decision of the Court of Appeal in Ex parte Cooke, re Strachan (L. Rep. 4 Ch. Div. 123) raises some questions of the highest importance to trustees as well as to persons in the position of trustees, who are intrusted with property for a specific purpose. The case is also interesting as throwing light upon certain dicta of Lord Ellenborough in Taylor v. Plumer (3 M. & S. 562).

It is a well-established principle that, wherever the property of a party has been wrongfully misapplied, or a trust fund has been wrongfully converted into another species of property, if its identity can be traced, it will be held in its new form, liable to the rights of the original owner or cestui que trust: (Story Eq. Jur., § 1258).

Lord Holt ruled in 1708, in L'Apostre v. Plaistrier (cited 1 P. Wms. 318), that trust property in the possession of a factor empowered to dispose of it for his principal, did not pass to his assignees upon his becoming a bankrupt. A few days afterwards Lord Cowper came to the same decision: (Copeman v. Gallant, 1 P. Wms. 320.) The doctrine was extended in Whitecombe v. Jacob (Salk. 160), which was decided in 1711. In that case a factor entrusted with the disposal of merchandise for his principal sold it, and received the money, and instead of paying the money to his principal vested the produce in other goods, and died indebted in debts of a higher nature, such as specialty debts. The Court of Chancery held that those goods should be taken as the merchant's estate, and not the factor's. The authority of this case at law was acknowledged by Willes, C.J. in Scott v. Surman (Wilks 400). In Ryall v. Roll (1 Alk. 172), the two latter cases are quoted, and Lee, C.J., accepts the principle that "things arising from the sale of other things follow the nature of the goods themselves." Again, Lord Mansfield decided (Howard v. Jemmett, 3 Burr. 1369) in 1763, that if an executor becomes bankrupt, the commissioners could not seize the specific effects of his testator, not even in money, which could be specifically distinguished and ascertained to belong to the testator, and not to the bankrupt. So in the case of specific remittances. The representatives can be in no better position than the person whom they represent would have been: (Ex parte Chion, 3 P. Wms. 187, and Hassall v. Smithers, 12 Ves. 119.) With respect to money which has been converted into land the same principles apply, the only difficulty being that of proof: (Per Lord Hardwick in Lane v. Dighton, Amb. 409; See Lench v. Lench, 10 Ves. 517.)

The judgment of Lord Ellenborough in Taylor v. Plumer (3 M. & S. 562), 1815, contains an able exposition of this branch of law. This was an action in trover brought by the assignees of one Walsh, a stockbroker, to recover certain valuable securities from the defendant. The facts stated were that the defendant entrusted the broker with money for the purchase of Exchequer bills. This money the broker had misapplied by buying American stock and bullion. He afterwards absconded, but having been taken before he had left England, he gave up to the defendant the securities for the stock and the bullion. The broker became bankrupt on the day on which he misapplied plaintiff's money. The Court held in a considered judgment that the plaintiff was entitled to retain the proceeds of the securities as against the plaintiffs.

Lord Ellenborough, who delivered the judgment of the Court, said: "Upon a view of the authorities and consideration of the arguments, it should seem that if the property in its original state and form was conveyed with a trust in favour of the plaintiff, no change of that state and form can divest it of such trust, or give the factor, or those who represent him in right any other more valid claim in respect to it than they respectively had before such change. An abuse of trust can confer no right on the party abusing it, nor on those who claim in priority with him." His Lordship went on to say that the defendant's counsel was obliged to contend that if A. is trusted by B. with money to purchase a horse for him and he purchases a carriage with that money, B. is entitled to the carriage, and continued, "If he be not so entitled, the case on the part of the defendant appears to be hardly sustainable in argument. It makes no difference in reason or law into what other form different from the original the change may have been made, whether it be into that of promissory notes for the security of the money which was produced by the sale of the goods of the plaintiff, as in Scott v. Surman (Wilks, 400), or into other merchandise, as in Whitecomb v. Jacob (Salk. 160), for the product of or substitute for the original thing still follows the thing itself, as long as it can be ascertained to be the thing itself, as when the means of ascertainment of the thing itself ceases, the case when the subject is turned into money, is founded in a general mass of the same description. The difficulty which arises in such a case is a difficulty of fact and not of law, and the dictum that money has no ear-mark must be understood in the same way, i.e., as predicated only of an undivided and undistinguishable mass of current money. But money in a bag, or otherwise kept apart from other money, guineas, or other coin marked (if the fact were so), for the purpose of being distinguished, are so far earmarked as to fall within the rule on this subject, which applies to every other description of personal property whilst it remains (as the property in question did) in the hands of the factor or his general representatives."

This case was the subject of much discussion in the Court of Appeal in 1876, in Ex parte Cooke, re Strachan (supra). There a trustee employed a broker to sell trust stock and invest the proceeds in railway shares on behalf of the trust estate. The broker had full notice that the stock in question was trust stock. He sold for cash and bought the railway shares to the same amount for the settling day. The price of the trust stock was received in a cheque, which the broker paid in to his account at his bankers. Before the arrival of the settling day he stopped payment and went into liquidation, and the trustee claimed so much of the broker's balance at his bankers as arose from the proceeds of the trust stock. The claim was disallowed by the registrar on the ground that the relation between broker and customer was similar to that between banker and customer. This decision was reversed on appeal by Lord Justice James, Sir Richard Baggallay, and Sir Geo. Bramwell. Taylor v. Plumer (sup.) was relied on for the appellant. All the learned judges agreed that this case was an authority to be acted upon in the case before the court, but Sir Richard Baggallay would express no opinion how the latter case would have stood if the money had not been trust money, or if the broker had received it without any notice of the fact. The other two learned judges, however, were clear that, apart from the question of trust, the position of a broker was that of an agent into whose hands money is put to be applied in a peculiar way. "The money arising from the sale," said Lord Justice James, "is trust money, and by no bargain between A. (the plaintiff) and the broker, nor by any rule of the Stock Exchange, can it be made anything but trust money liable to be followed as such. Even had there been no such trust it appears to me that the case must have been decided in favour of the appellant, for I cannot find any distinction between this case and Taylor v. Plumer." The fact that the payment was made by cheque did not prevent the property being followed.

It is clear that the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Ex parte Cooke does not rest upon the same ratio decidendi as that in Taylor v. Plumer, and the question may be raised at a future time whether the statement of the law by Lord Ellenborough should be accepted in its entirety. With the strong dicta of Lord Justice James and Sir Geo. Bramwell in its support, it will probably be accepted. In Ex parte Cooke there was a double trust. The person who employed the broker was himself a trustee of the property in question. But irrespective of this consideration, the duties devolving upon the broker were, from the very nature of his employment, analogous to those of a trustee with respect to that property. It is submitted that the first consideration is immaterial. Referring to the case of Taylor v. Plumer (sup.), it was pointed out by Sir Geo. Bramwell that the bonds were not the property of Plumer by reason of his having ordered them to be purchased, and they could only be held to belong to him because they were bought with his money; hence the conclusion that if the broker had been caught with the money upon him, the defendant could have claimed it. He could have claimed it "because the money was paid to the broker, not as a trustee in the strict sense of the word, so that no action at law could be maintained against him, and he would only be liable to have a bill filed against him, but was handed to him in a fiduciary character, so as not to create the mere relation of debtor and creditor between him and his principal." This was not necessary to be stated for the decision of Ex parte Cooke. It goes, however, fully to an affirmation of Taylor v. Plumer.

AGENCY—RIGHT OF AGENT TO RECOVER COMMISSION.(a)

THE rules which provide that an agent is not entitled to commission either where his authority is revoked before execution or where the services performed are not those authorised, are both illustrated by the case of Toppin v. Healey (11 W. R. 466), decided by the Common Pleas in 1863. In that case the plaintiff was employed by the defendant to negotiate a loan on the terms that he was to be paid commission if he procured the loan, but none if he did not. Before the plaintiff had done anything in the matter the defendant wrote to him varying the terms on which he would accept the loan. The plaintiff tried to obtain it on the latter terms. He could not succeed, but he had the offer of a loan on the terms of the first authority. This the defendant refused to accept. The court held that the plaintiff could not claim any commission, as the first authority was revoked, and as he did not procure the loan under the substituted terms.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

JUSTICES' CLERKS BILL.

On the motion for going into Committee on this Bill.

Viscount MIDLETON suggested that the measure should be extended to the office of Clerk of the Peace; that words in the Bill which would prevent the appointment of any member of the Bar to the office of justices' clerk should be annulled; and that power should be given to justices to grant retiring pensions to their clerks.

Earl BEAUCHAMP said the second of the noble Viscount's suggestions was now made for the first time. It ought to have been put forward earlier. As to the two other suggestions he could hold out no promise that the Government would accede to them. The noble Earl then moved that the Bill be committed pro forma, in order that he might introduce certain amendments and have the Bill reprinted. Their Lordships then went into Committee pro forma, and on the motion of Earl Beauchamp certain amendments were introduced. The Bill, as amended, was subsequently reported to the House.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE BILL.

The LORD CHANCELLOR, in moving the second reading of this Bill, said the object of the measure was to provide an additional judge for the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice. The circumstances which rendered this proposal necessary would involve a consideration of the state of business in the various courts; and as this was a subject which excited very much interest out of doors, he would ask their lordships to occupy them for a short time while he stated why, in the opinion of the Government, the proposal in this Bill had become necessary. At the beginning of the present year his attention was called to the increase in the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice. He received among other communications a letter from the Incorporated Law Society, which he would lay on the table that evening, because he proposed to allude to certain statements which it contained. Those statements were deserving of notice because of the intelligence and importance of the body from whom they emanated, and because they were made with great care and great accuracy. The representations of the Incorporated Law Society had reference—first, to the causes and matters before the judges; secondly, to the business in the chambers of the chief clerks; and, lastly, to the business in the registrar's office. It appeared that, going back to Hilary Term, 1875, which was before the Judicature Act came into operation, there stood on the 11th of January in that year for hearing before the four Primary Judges of the Court of Chancery 301 causes, and that at the beginning of the Hilary Sittings in the following year there were within thirteen of the same number; but at the beginning of Hilary Sittings of the present year there were no fewer than 566. He might add that on the first day of Easter Term, which was within the present week, the number standing for hearing was 602. It would be a mistake of their Lordships to suppose that those 602 cases included those which stood for hearing at the beginning of the Hilary Sittings of the present year; because he found that during those sittings, which extended over sixty-six days, 592 cases were heard and disposed of, so that the whole of those standing for hearing at the beginning of the sittings, and some new ones in addition, were heard and disposed of before the sittings closed. The question arose, what was the cause of the great increase? He believed there were two causes. In the first place, there was no doubt that, under the new system, the hearing of Chancery causes occupied a much longer time than it did under the old one. Formerly the evidence was taken in writing before the hearing of the cause commenced. That, no doubt, was a very unsatisfactory way of arriving at the truth, but certainly it facilitated the hearing of the cause, because the parties came into court with the whole of the evidence on either side ready to be referred to, and counsel were from the first in a position to direct their attention to that portion of it which was really important. Now that the witnesses were examined voir dire, he believed the truth was better arrived at, but it was arrived at with a consumption of much greater time than was formerly necessary for the hearing of causes. That was one reason of the great increase. The next was the very considerable influx of business to the Chancery Division of the High Court which had followed the passing of the Judicature Act. In the letter of the Incorporated Law Society some particulars were given as to that point. On an inspection of some returns of the number of actions, including informations, special cases, and administration summonses, commenced in the Court of Chancery from 1864 to 1874, the council of the society found that the average was 2500 a year. In the year 1875, probably in anticipation of the Judicature Act, the number was 3992; but in the year ending the 1st Nov. 1876, the number was 5111, showing that the number in 1876 had risen to double what the number was up to 1874. He believed this was largely accounted for by the natural increase of business throughout the country; but there could be no doubt that, to a considerable extent, it was accounted for by the fact that a large number of cases which formerly were tried by what were called the common law courts, were now brought to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice. Suitors had now a choice in the matter, and a great number of them preferred to have their cases tried by the Chancery Division. Now, in noticing the time necessary for the disposal of cases, it must be borne in mind that in respect of business ordinarily brought before the Court of Chancery, it was not finally disposed of when the cause was decided by the judge. Generally some further proceedings in regard to account or inquiry had to be taken in chamber. It was not so in respect of cases ordinarily tried in the common law courts, because such cases generally ended with the hearing in court. As to the 602 causes now standing for hearing, he had no doubt that owing to the assiduity of the judges they would all be disposed of within a reasonably short time; but he was bound to say that, having regard to the pressure on the time of the judges arising from petitions and motions, he was afraid that all those causes, with the additional ones which would come on during the sittings, could not be disposed of before the long vacation, and therefore he was of opinion that the Incorporated Law Society were warranted in saying that the judicial power of the Chancery Division and the High Court of Justice was inadequate. In those circumstances Her Majesty's Government felt it to be their duty to propose to Parliament the addition of one judge to the ordinary judges of the High Court of Justice. The Bill provided for the appointment of the additional judge, and it proposed that, in the first instance, the additional judge should be assigned to the Chancery Division. Of course, like all other judges appointed since the passing of the Judicature Act, he would be liable to be transferred to any other division than the one to which he was first appointed in the event of the business in the latter being such as that his services were no longer required in it. The Incorporated Law Society referred not merely to the state of business in Chambers and in the Registrars' Office. The judges of the Chancery Division had at present three chief clerks and a considerable number of ordinary clerks. The Government did not propose that the judge to be appointed under this Bill should have any chamber clerks or should be charged with the conduct of business in chambers. He would explain the reason why. The Incorporated Law Society, speaking of the business in chambers, expressed themselves in this way:

"In reference to the chief clerks' office, the council would only desire to say that they frequently receive complaints of the difficulty and delay in getting inquiries prosecuted in chambers; of the assiduity of the chief clerks there can be no question, but they, like the judges, cannot keep pace with the increase and accumulation of business, and the fact is that it is not practicable in most of the chambers to obtain any appointment for a sufficient length of time to make any real progress in an inquiry except at intervals of a month, and often more. It is manifest that the only practicable mode of relieving the pressure on the chief clerks is by relieving the pressure on the judges."

The Government proposed that the judge to be appointed under this Bill should hear those cases which before the passing of the Judicature Act would probably have been brought in the Common Law Courts and which did not require to be dealt with in chambers; but if he found that from the pressure of business in the chambers of the other judges additional assistance there would be required, it would be his duty to propose it. He was bound, however to say that, after careful inquiries, he could not see any block or any serious delay in the chambers of the Chancery judges. He had referred to the learned judges themselves, and he would read for their lordships one of the reports made to him from each of the chief clerks of those learned judges. From one of the chief clerks of Vice-Chancellor Bacon he had this statement:—

"There is no block in the business of these chambers. It can be worked through expeditiously if solicitors are desirous of doing so. If an appointment of two or three hours is required, the longest time solicitors have to wait is a fortnight, but generally such appointments can be given within a much shorter time. Short appointments (that is, not exceeding half an hour) can always be given within three or four days of the application. In pressing matters arrangements are always made for the immediate disposal of them, whether a long or a short appointment is required. The time allotted to each appointment is sufficient to dispose of as much evidence as the solicitors are prepared to produce."

By one of the Chief Clerks of Hall, V.C., this report was given:—

"Notwithstanding the additional work thus created, there is no 'block,' as it is termed, here. An appointment to proceed for one or two hours on any special inquiry or account could be given, after the Easter recess, for a day as early as the 25th April, and similar appointments could be procured after that day. Special appointments at a quarter-past ten in the morning for three-quarters of an hour could also be given for as early a date as the 19th April."

From the chamber of Malins, V.C., there was this statement:—

"Before the Chief Clerk.—Half-hour appointment.—Before eleven on April 12th, and at and after one on April 18th. One hour appointment.—Before eleven on April 14th, and at and after one on April 18th. Two hours appointments.—On April 20th. Before the Junior Clerks.—One hour and upwards on April 16th. From the above dates the books are clear."

"It is the practice to divide the day into two nearly equal parts, and to devote the first part to summonses, and the second to appointments, varying from ten minutes to two hours in length. As regards the accounts and inquiries, I do not think that any additional delay has arisen. As regards summonses the case is different. The usual return for a summons is the third day from that of its date, and until recently it was found practicable, with rare exceptions, to make all summonses returnable on the third day. It is still practicable to do this with the simpler kind of summonses, such as those for time, for production of documents, for payment into court of purchase money, and the like; but for special summonses it has been found necessary to make the return longer, and they are now commonly made returnable at ten, and sometimes at fourteen days, and this is still a growing evil. The above is the result of my experience in my own division, but I have reason to know that it corresponds in the main with the experience of my colleagues."

He had been anxious that their lordships should know the information he had received as to the state of business in the chambers of the judges. He had not the least objection if a case was made out for it to advise Parliament to strengthen the staff in the Judges' Chambers, but he had a great objection to make any such proposition unless there was a clear case of emergency, and he was not satisfied that there was any such case. Without appointing an additional staff, care would be taken to lighten the business in chambers. Under the Judicature Act power was given for the appointment of official referees, but he found that the business referred to those officers had not been sufficient to occupy their time. It was said that this was owing to the scale of fees payable in the case of reference to the official referees. He thought there was ground for the allegation, and a change would be made in that respect by which in proceedings before the official referees only one single fee would be taken. The judges in the Court of Chancery were prepared to assign to the official referees business which would much lighten that now discharged in chambers. The third point to which the Incorporated Law Society directed attention was that relating to the registrars' office. In their letter there was this statement:

"In regard to the registrars' office, as to the delay in which there have been so many complaints in the public papers, the Council have made inquiries and learn that those complaints are only too well founded, and the reason is not far to seek. It appears that in 1866 the number of orders drawn up was 13,400, in 1875 the number was about 12,000, but in the year ending the 1st Nov. 1876, the number had suddenly risen to 18,400, showing again the enormous increase following the operation of the Judicature Act. And it should be stated that this large increase of business has had to be borne by an actually decreased staff of registrars, a vacancy there not having been filled up."

He believed that the decreased staff might have had something to do with the pressure. He had purposely refrained from filling up the vacancy in the registrar's office after the passing of the Judicature Act, in order to see whether it would be really necessary to fill it up, but after an experience of two years he had found from the increase of business that it would be necessary, and the vacancy had been filled up. He thought he would be wrong if he sat down without stating to their lordships what was the state of business in the other divisions of the court. The Court of Appeal had been sitting in two divisions, and he found that at the beginning of the Hilary Sittings of the present year, there were 142 appeals waiting to be disposed of, and that at the end of those

LEGAL EDUCATION.

Lord SELBORNE having moved the second reading of the Inns of Court Bill,

The LORD CHANCELLOR remarked that this Bill, and also the General School of Law Bill which followed it on the paper, had been two or three times before the House in as many different sessions. He had on all those occasions been most ready to express his respect for the motives which had led his noble and learned friend to introduce those Bills, and his desire to render any assistance in his power towards carrying out the object which his noble and learned friend had in view. When the Bills were before the House last session he expressed his hope that in some form or other he should be able to obtain the concurrence of the Inns of Court to dealing with the subject to which these Bills were directed. Since then he had been in communication with the Inns of Court, and he was aware that they expressed their decided objection to the measures of his noble and learned friend. Before stating more fully what were the views of the Inns of Court, he would endeavour to explain his own views as to the principle on which legislation on the subject of legal education and legal discipline ought to proceed. We were accustomed to hear different language held as regarded the Inns of Court. Some persons maintained that those inns were simply private bodies intrusted with property which was their own, and that no legislation should take cognizance of or interfere with them. On the other hand, there were those who held that the Inns of Court were public bodies and executed a public trust, and that their property, which was in no respect like private property, ought to be subject to legislation. His own view was this—that there was a certain amount of truth in both those views, though they seemed to be antagonistic. In his mind the Inns of Court were private societies in this respect, that they regulated their own government; they chose their own members and their own governing body, laid down the terms of the subscriptions which must be contributed by their own members, and the property they possessed they possessed as a private society, such as a club. But, on the other hand, the Inns of Court had a public trust of a very important description. To the Inns of Court was assigned the power of determining what persons should be entitled to audience in Her Majesty's courts of law, and they had the power of regulating the discipline of the Bar. Audience in Her Majesty's courts of law was a very high privilege and honour, and it emanated from the Crown in the same way as a University degree did. In his opinion it was not within the province of legislation to interfere with the private regulations or private property of the Inns of Court; but, on the other hand, it was within the province of the Legislature to see that the public trust which was delegated to the Inns of Court should be performed in a manner satisfactory to the Legislature, and, if necessary, to take securities for its being so performed. There were three points in respect of which it interested the public and interested Parliament to see that the trusts and duties delegated to the Inns of Court should be properly performed. The first of these was the education of those who were to be called to the Bar. The second was admission to the Bar—that the terms and conditions of that admission were satisfactory, that the standard of examination were sufficiently high, and that, on the other hand (which he thought of as much importance), that it was not too high. The third was the administration of the discipline of the Bar, so that the interests of the public were consulted, while justice was secured for every member of the Profession. Now as to the objections of the Inns of Court. These societies found that one of the Bills of his noble and learned friend provided for the appointment of commissioners who after a certain specified time would have the power of making regulations for education, if they themselves did not make them. The Inns of Court objected that they did not require legislation enabling them to make ordinances. They were unfettered by any statutory rules, and they were free themselves to make any ordinances which the necessity of the case might require. They pointed to what they had already done in the matter of education for the Bar and admission to the Bar; and he was bound to say that the Inns of Court deserved credit for their liberality in that respect. The sum annually spent by them jointly for this object amounted to £7850. Deducting from this £2435 received in fees, there remained £5415. To this had to be added £3102, made up of separate expenditure on education by each of the four Inns, and the total for the four came to £8517 a year. There was a committee of the four Inns, for the superintendence of education, and a member of that committee had assured him that it never had suggested any expenditure for education that was not voted by the Inns as a matter of course. He would, however, take the liberty of pointing out a matter of which the present position of was decidedly unsatisfactory, and in respect of which he was unable to see any remedy without legislation. The general committee for superintending education was a voluntary one. Any one of the Inns of Court could withdraw from it. There was a time some years ago when different views on the subject of education were held by different Inns, and the consequence was that they acted in antagonism rather than in harmony. Then it was utterly impossible under the existing system that there could be a united regulation in regard of discipline. Discipline must at present be exercised by each in respect of its own members. Again, when inquiry was to be made with the view of exercising discipline, there was the want of power on the part of the Inns of Court to compel the attendance of witnesses. He understood that the Inns of Court were willing to consent to legislation in respect of the matters to which he had just referred. They were willing that a council should be appointed to act for the four Inns; that the Council should be composed of thirty members—six to be appointed by the Crown and six each by the four Inns; and that provision should be made for a change, so that the same persons should not remain too long on the Council. The Inns of Court were willing that the Council of thirty should have the power of making rules for controlling legal education and admission to the Bar, and that it should have the administration and discipline, with the power of investigation and of requiring the attendance of witnesses. The mode in which the Council was to be supplied with funds was matter of detail. He did not want to raise any issue on the Bill of his noble and learned friend, but he made this statement in order that his noble and learned friend might take it into consideration. He thought his noble and learned friend would agree with him that with a view to succeeding in passing his measures through Parliament and rendering them generally acceptable, it was desirable that he should have the co-operation of the Inns of Court; and therefore he would suggest that in Committee on one of his Bills his noble and learned friend might introduce amendments which would embody the plan to which the Inns of Court were willing to consent. He must point out that such a scheme would not meet one point in the proposal of his noble and learned friend—namely, the united education of barristers and solicitors, in the scheme which he had had the honour of pointing out no provision was made for the education of solicitors; but although the Incorporated Society had expressed its approval of the proposal for such united education, he had some doubt as to the extent of approval which it would receive from the solicitors generally. One of the things for which the solicitors were anxious was an alteration in the present rules relating to the admission of a solicitor to the Bar or of a barrister to the rank of solicitor in cases where the members of either of the legal professions wished to change to the other. The Incorporated Society would desire to have the examination of solicitors more under their control than it was at present, and there was much to be said in favour of that desire. He did not wish to go into the question whether the separation of the profession of barrister from that of solicitor ought to be maintained. That was foreign to the question before their Lordships; but what he did say was, that so long as the two professions remained separate, he had the greatest doubt as to the expediency of trying to establish a combined plan for the education and discipline of both. If such a scheme was formed the controlling body should be composed of a certain number of barristers and a certain number of solicitors, and he believed that very considerable inconvenience would arise from solicitors exercising discipline over barristers or barristers exercising discipline over solicitors. He was certain there would be a great objection to it on the part of the Bar. He asked the consideration of his noble and learned friend for the suggestion he had ventured to make with reference to the plan of the Inns of Court.

Lord SELBORNE thanked his noble and learned friend for the great consideration he had always manifested towards him. He, however, felt much disappointed at what had just been said by his noble and learned friend, remembering that last year his noble and learned friend told their Lordships that he hoped to be able, with the concurrence of the Inns of Court, to introduce a measure dealing with legal education. In the measure shadowed out by his noble and learned friend on that occasion, an external body was one of the elements. In the plan sketched by him that evening that element was omitted. He regretted that his noble and learned friend did not take the matter in hand himself with all the authority of his high position.

The LORD CHANCELLOR begged to say that the suggestion to his noble and learned friend arose from his desire not to take the subject out of his hands; but he was perfectly prepared to deal with it himself by a separate Bill or by amendments in one of the Bills of his noble and learned friend.

Lord SELBORNE had no personal feeling in the matter. He must say that he thought his noble and learned friend conceded more than he ought to what was called the private character of the Inns of Court. He confessed that the only single circumstance he could see which could be looked on as giving them the appearance of being private societies was that they were not incorporated. But he declined to look upon incorporation as a test in the matter. Looking back through the history of the four Inns of Court, he did not find a single fact which went to establish that they were private societies. He believed that not one of them had ever applied one shilling of the society's funds to its own private use. He was sure that the Inn to which he had the honour of belonging—Lincoln's Inn—had never done so. By law there was no access to the profession of the Bar except by these societies, and the law compelled all students to pay their fees and subscriptions to these societies. This was the indispensable preliminary to the entrance to one of the greatest professions, and the Inns of Court had the sole regulation and conduct of legal education. It seemed to him that, as the position and functions of the Inns of Court were thus defined by law, and as every shilling they possessed was legally the result of fees received, no element of a private character could be recognised in them. He quite endorsed the terms of praise in which his noble and learned friend had spoken of the exertions of the Inns of Court in the case of legal education; he was, however, bound to express his belief that the pressure put upon them towards that direction had at least acted as a wholesome stimulus. They had not met with unvaried success. He had always thought that the exclusiveness of the system, which would not open its doors to anybody except its own members and students, was the greatest obstacle to the success of any plan of education they might adopt, because the fewer the students and the more limited their objects the less emulation there would be, and everything would be narrow instead of broad. For that reason he advocated as large a system of legal education in all branches as possible, and it should be open to all Her Majesty's subjects, all of whom would be much benefited by a knowledge of the law; and he had always wished to lay the foundations of such a system. It would certainly be useful to the country in general, and especially to magistrates and to the owners of property. At present, however, the general public had no means of getting such knowledge, the benefits of the existing system being divided between future barristers on the one hand and future solicitors on the other. He had always felt this objection to the present system, which he thought tended very decidedly to prevent the enlargement and expansion of legal education. He was, therefore, most anxious to see some such institution established as the one proposed, which should enable the whole country to know where to find a really good school of jurisprudence without any premature anticipation of the professional differences and distinctions which would afterwards arise. To found such a school had been one of his most cherished wishes, and he was sure that there existed in the country a disposition to support some similar scheme. Fresh evidence of this disposition had been given only last year. The widow of a recently deceased barrister had given £4500 for the purpose of legal education, and the late Mr. Justice Quain had, by his will, left in trust the sum of £10,000 for the same object, but with the proviso that the legal Profession should not share exclusively in the benefits of the bequest, and that the education given should be open to all. He could not but consider this support very encouraging while the subject was as yet only struggling into notice. He hoped the Inns of Court would not follow the precedents of Doctors' Commons and Serjeants'-inn, which had acted on the notion that they were private societies, and, carrying the idea to its final results, had sold their property and divided it among their members. In taking up this subject he had only strictly public interests in view. He had no feeling of a personal kind about it from beginning to end. Indeed, all feelings of that kind would have rather inclined him to do what was pleasant to the Inns of Court, especially his own inn, of which friends of his were conspicuous members. He was aware that effect could not be given to his proposals unless they received a certain amount of support both from the Bar and the solicitors, and also the acquiescence of the general body of the judges. He had received communications from the latter, some of whom sent valuable information, while others did not give encouragement to the scheme. He had likewise done his best to obtain support from the Bar, but in this respect he had not received the support he had hoped for. The solicitors, however, had uniformly supported the scheme, and he did not think they would do otherwise now. After the present stage of the Bill he would not press them case in which we consider that the name should not have been made public. The money, the subject of the two charges, has been paid in each case, so that nothing but professional considerations remained.

MASTER BENETT's report in the matter of Mr. James Walker, a solicitor—referred to elsewhere—is before us, and consists of eighty-three folios. We here refer to it for the purpose of calling attention to the following passage in the report, which was read in court on Wednesday last: "The matter then rested till towards the end of March 1870, when — instructed Mr. —, who though, according to Mr. — evidence, then still his clerk, did business usually transacted by solicitors on his own account, to apply for the money." Solicitors should never overlook the importance of not allowing their clerks (those who may be so disposed) to drift into the position of what we will call law agents, who act for themselves in certain legal work, and introduce business, and are otherwise more or less independent of their principal.

ATTENTION should be paid to the wording of notices of motion upon motions for judgment under Order XL., rule 2. In a case which came before the Exchequer Division on motion for judgment, the Court refused to hear the application, on the ground that the grounds of the motion were not stated, in the notice served on the other side, as required by that rule. The motion did not, however, fall through altogether, but was postponed by the Court in order that a fresh notice might be served, but the party serving the insufficient notice was ordered to pay the costs of the day.

WE are informed of an order having been made at the Common Law Judges' Chambers by Master Walton, during the present week, under the following circumstances: The plaintiff having brought an action claiming (inter alia) payment of compound interest, the defendant appeared, and the action was not further proceeded with. The defendant, after some delay, issued a summons calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the action should not be dismissed for want of prosecution. Such application was made under Order XXIX., rule 1. An order was made unless the plaintiff should deliver a statement of claim within a fixed number of days. The plaintiff so delivered his statement of claim, and the nature of the action being such that the defendant was unable to deliver his statement of defence without better particulars in the action, the defendant's solicitor took out a summons for such particulars, and the usual order was made thereon, with a stay of proceedings until the delivery thereof. The concluding words of the order were, "that unless such particulars be delivered in — days, all further proceedings in the cause be stayed until the delivery thereof." The plaintiff failed to deliver the particulars as ordered, with the avowed object of putting a stop to the action, which he desired to abandon, but without paying the defendant's costs, and it was to secure this latter end that the defendant was driving plaintiff on. After the order for particulars, the defendant issued a summons for further time to deliver statement of defence, and an order was made thereon. After further delay, the defendant not receiving the particulars ordered to be delivered, issued a second summons asking that the action may be dismissed for want of prosecution, upon which Master Walton made the order, although there seems no expressed warrant for it in the Judicature Acts and rules, while we can hardly doubt that the justice of the case required that such an order should be made. We understand that the plaintiff's solicitor contended that in face of the previous order staying proceedings in the action, such an application could not be entertained, while the defendant's solicitor replied, that the stay of proceedings must be taken to refer only to proceedings which might be taken by the plaintiff; and further, that assuming the contention of the plaintiff to be right, he had waived the point by consenting to an order on the defendant's summons for time to deliver defence, such order being made after the order staying proceedings.

A "WEST-END MANAGING CLERK" calls our attention—by a letter which will be found in another column—to another matter in which the Common Law Masters put an entirely different construction upon certain provisions in the schedule to the order of the 28th Oct. 1875, relating to "court fees" under the Judicature Acts, to that put upon the same by the Clerks of Records and Writs in the Chancery Division. It is really most unfortunate that these differences in practice should be rather increasing than diminishing. Every lawyer knows how great ~~was~~ the divergence between the office and ~~the~~ of the old common law courts w that of the Court of Chancery. Then came the Judicature Acts and Rules, which aimed at uniformity of practice in the several divisions of the High Court; and, this being so, we venture to ask whether there has been a single meeting since November 1875 of representatives of the Chancery chief clerks, the common law masters, the record and writ clerks, the Chancery registrars, and the chief officials in the several law offices, especially from the Writ and Appearance offices? If there has been any such meeting for the purpose of assimilating the practice of all the divisions, as far as circumstances will allow, we can only say we have never heard of it, and if it has been held it has certainly been in the last degree profitless and barren of good results. The particular point with which our correspondent deals is that of the fee payable for copies made by a solicitor in an action, which copies are to be marked at the law offices as an office copy. The proper fee in such a case is 2d. a folio, and while this amount is properly charged in the Chancery Division, the sum of 6d. a folio—being the amount chargeable if the copy is an office copy—is usually charged in the common law divisions for all copies which are merely marked as office copies. The point is of some importance to solicitors, who are the best, indeed the sole judges of whether or not pressure of time requires that they should make copies of documents to be marked as office copies. The present view of the masters results in clients having to pay for such copies twice over.

REFERRING to our recent comment as to the proposed freer interchange between the two branches of the Profession, a correspondent (a solicitor) says: "I read the report of the last meeting of the committee of the Legal Practitioners' Society in the LAW TIMES. I see the clause relating to the interchange between the two branches of the legal profession has been settled. I should like to point out the view I take of it, which is, that it is an unsatisfactory, if not objectionable, alteration. It is, I think, an objectionable amendment, because, whilst partially remedying an evil, it may draw away observation from it and postpone more indefinitely than at present the time when it will be fully abolished. If the question, whether a barrister or solicitor should be allowed to pass from one branch of the profession to the other uninterruptedly on passing the prescribed examinations, is dealt with at all it should be dealt with fairly, and no half measures should be resorted to. If there is no ground for continuing the present obstacle of three years, I want to know what ground there is for substituting one of two years. If the only ground is—and I know of no other—that solicitors ought to be placed under quarantine for a limited time, let it be advanced, and if it can be, as I think it can, let it be met. At any rate, do not let solicitors be a party to their own condemnation by perpetuating any longer the obstacle to a barrister's becoming a solicitor. Let them say 'We will not cast a stigma of the kind over our professional brethren, and whilst we remove the hindrance on our side we are prepared to wait till a due sense of what is fair and generous induces a reciprocity of action on their side.' If therefore the three years cannot be swept away, I should vote for confining the proposed enactments to removing the present hindrance to barristers wishing to change their sphere of action. The other amelioration will come in good time." There is much to agree with in these views, but they cannot be practically applied. The reform must be accomplished by degrees, so far as solicitors are concerned. We must be thankful for small concessions at the outset, the rest will follow in due time. We quite agree that solicitors should at once remove all obstacles to a barrister becoming a solicitor; in short, sect. 3 of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127 should be repealed and a new enactment secured, offering an easy entrance by barristers into the ranks of the solicitor's profession.

ALTHOUGH ample provision is made in the Judicature Acts and rules for ascertaining the christian and surnames of partners in a firm which has been sued, such Acts and rules also providing that service on one partner alone is necessary in order to entitle the plaintiff to proceed in an action against all the defendant partners (see Order XVI., rule 10; Order XII., rule 12; and Order IX., rule 6); yet in regard to process intended to be issued in the Mayor's Court London, or in the City of London Court, an intending plaintiff is unable to issue his process against a debtor or debtors, trading as "Thompson and Co.," without first furnishing to the officials of those courts the christian and surname of the person or persons trading under such a style. It is hardly necessary to say that this often greatly delays the issue of process, such delay being injurious to the interests of the intending plaintiff. A correspondent has recently pointed out in our columns that much of the practice of the High Court of Justice ought, without delay, to be extended to the inferior tribunals of the country; probably no one will disagree with this view, but the question is, who will be at the trouble of framing the necessary measure. The fact is that those country and London solicitors who are directly interested in improving the practice of local courts should have recognised bodies of their own, who should be especially entrusted with the duty of framing Bills to meet the more urgently called for reforms in connection with the practice and procedure of the courts referred to. This work can hardly be expected of the Council of the Incorporated Law Society, seeing that there is probably not a single member of that body who ever practises in county courts. County court practitioners must look after their own interests and their own convenience in regard to subjects such as those we have considered above.

OUR contemporary, the Globe, in discussing the question of apologies to the House of Commons by members of the House, calls attention to certain instances in point, and proceeds: "There is a tradition of an honourable member having had to go down upon his knees before the august assembly of St. Stephen's and tender an apology in that humble posture. True, he had given expression to insulting language, not merely to an individual member, but to the entire British House of Commons, by speaking of it as a 'dirty House.' It was for this he was condemned to go down upon his knees and humbly apologise, which he did, and then, as he rose from the floor, and ostentatiously brushed the dust from his knees, he remarked to those about him, but in a tone loud enough to be very generally audible, 'It is a dirty house though, for all that.' So the story goes; but another story somewhat similar, but a good deal more probable, is to be found in Oldfield's History, respecting an attorney who had been summoned to the bar of the House, and commanded to kneel and be reprimanded for having taken a prominent part in the election riot." Times have changed, and liberty is a more common commodity. We do not often hear of election riots, but solicitors in these days have more to do with the management and government of parliamentary elections than probably any other body of men in the country.

COMMON PLEAS DIVISION. (Before GROVE and LINDLEY, JJ.) Re A SOLICITOR.

Murray.—I have to move, my lord, on behalf of the Law Society that the master's report be now read in this case. It was referred to the master to inquire into the matter, and he has made a report.

Master Benett read his report, which is unnecessary to publish in our columns.]

GROVE, J.—Who appears in this case?

Murray.—I appear, my lord, for the Incorporated Law Society, and I am informed that Mr. Walker is not to be represented on this occasion. He appeared by counsel on inquiry before the master, and I am in the hands of the court as to the course that ought to be taken. My Lords, this rule was obtained by the Law Society upon what appeared to them to be two very serious charges, shortly, this—it is a case of receiving a legacy of nineteen guineas for this lady, Miss Williams, and, in fact, putting it into his own pocket. The facts of the evidence coming out strong, he thought fit to pay the money to Miss Williams. I need hardly say the Law Society have nothing to do with a compromise, nor does it affect the matter in the slightest degree; it affects it no more than if in a case of embezzlement the party was to pay the money after an indictment had been preferred; therefore the first is a case of misappropriating nineteen guineas to the detriment of this legatee. Well, my Lords, the second is a case of a different sort. He has £160 in his hands, and is told distinctly that must be paid into the Bank of England. Now, I am about to submit, according to the evidence, he did all he could to deprive Mr. Roberts of this money. He kept the conveyances for a year and a half, and it was only after these proceedings were taken, and nine months after the rule was obtained, and during the inquiry before the Master, that in this case he was advised or felt himself bound to pay the £160 to Mr. Roberts.

GROVE, J.—Since I have been a judge of this court, the court has frequently said, in looking to the conduct of the solicitor, they cannot pay any regard to the payment of the money. An immediate payment, when first asked, may be something upon which to appeal to the consideration of the court; but merely raising money at the last moment, when being struck off the rolls is imminent, does not alter the question. I am of opinion the rule should be made absolute for striking Mr. James Walker off the rolls of the

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

Inquiries, as to Students' Societies, as to the several Examinations, as to Admission on the Roll of the Supreme Court, as to being called to the Bar, and as to taking out and renewal of annual certificates, should be addressed to the Editor (Students' Department).

REFERRING to the leading paragraph in this column of our last issue, we have received another letter upon the subject of whether the Solicitors' Acts are complied with by an assignment of articles, or whether fresh articles are necessary instead of an assignment. This letter we publish among Law Student's Notes and Queries. The questions involved in the decision of the Court in Es parte Adams are of sufficient importance to warrant the issue by the Incorporated Law Society of some special directions upon the subject to articulated students. As we have already pointed out the use of the word "assigned" in sect. 5 of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, does not affect the question, and it should be noticed that the schedule to the Stamp Act 1870 deals with the stamp duty to be paid upon articles where a clerk is "bound fresh for the same purpose."

ARTICLES of clerkship (whether original or supplemental), dated on any day during April, must be enrolled and registered at the Petty Bag Office, Chancery-lane, on or before the same day in the month of October next, and when articles are enrolled and registered on any day during the month of April, they must be produced and entered at the Law Institution on or before the same day in the month of July next. See 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 8 and 9, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, s. 7. Failure to comply with these statutory requirements often entails a loss of time upon articulated students.

WHERE articles expire between 10th Jan. and 15th April, candidates may be examined in January. If between 14th April and 23rd May, candidates may be examined in April; if between 21st May and 2nd Nov., in June, and if between 1st Nov. and 11th Jan., in November: or, of course, at any subsequent examination. Six weeks' notice at least is necessary for these examinations, the same to be calculated up to the first day of the month of examination. See the regulations of Nov. 1875.

AN examination certificate is only available for admission on the roll of the Supreme Court within six months from its date, and must otherwise be specially enlarged by an order of the Master of the Rolls, which should be applied for at the Petty Bag Office. See regulations as to examinations and admissions of Nov. 1875.

THE following lectures and classes in Common Law are appointed to be delivered and held in the Hall of the Incorporated Law Society, Chancery-lane, during the ensuing week: Monday class 4.30 to 6 o'clock p.m.; Tuesday, ditto; Wednesday, ditto; Thursday, Lecture, 6 to 7 o'clock p.m. Subscribers are not admitted to the hall after lectures have commenced.

THE hon. librarian of the United Law Students Society (Mr. F. B. Moyle) has received further subscriptions from eminent members of the Profession, among whom are the following:

486) referring to the fact that by a recent decision the Master of the Rolls has declared all assignments of articles of clerkship to be invalid. The matter being of considerable moment to myself, will you give me the reference to the case in which the Master of the Rolls has given this decision. FRED. DUTTON.
[The case is not reported, but it followed Ex parte Adams, L. Rep. 10 Q.B. 227, which see.—Ed.]

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.—I have passed the preliminary: is there any and what limit to the time within which I can be articulated without again passing? JAS. H. DALLAS.

REAL PROPERTY AND CONVEYANCING.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

WILL—CONSTRUCTION—"LEGAL OR NEXT OF KIN."—Testator bequeathed property to his wife for life, with remainder to his sons and daughters, the share of the daughters "to be vested in the bank in their own name, and the interest for life to be received by them to remain as a jointure for their use in case of their marrying untouchable by their husbands, but to descend to their legal or nearest of kin." Held, that a daughter, whether marrying or not, took only a life interest, with remainder to her next of kin: (Harris v. Newton, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 173. V.C.M.)

DAMAGES TO ADJOINING PREMISES BY ESCAPE OF SEWAGE—OWNER'S LIABILITY.—An occupier of land can recover against an adjoining occupier for damage caused by noxious substances coming on to his premises, in a way in which he is not bound to receive them, from any artificial structure on the adjoining premises, although the adjoining occupier is ignorant of the facts which cause the injury, and there is no negligence. Plaintiff and defendant occupied adjoining premises. An old drain commenced on defendant's premises, passed under the houses, came back through defendant's premises, and then passed under plaintiff's. The drain got out of repair under defendant's premises, whereby sewage and water escaped into plaintiff's premises, and caused damage. Defendant did not know that the drain turned back through his premises and under plaintiff's, or that it was out of repair, and was not guilty of negligence. Held, on motion for judgment, that plaintiff was entitled to recover: (Humphreys v. Connas, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 180. C.P.)

MAGISTRATES' LAW.

LAMBETH POLICE COURT.

(Before Mr. CHANCE.)

THE SCHOOL BOARD FOR LONDON v. CRAFTER.
Compensation—Tenant—Evidence.

This was a case under the 121st section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act.

The claim was in respect of the premises, No. 219, Beresford-street, Walworth, in the occupation of Mr. George Cramer, a builder and decorator, at a rental of £23 per annum.

Woolf appeared for Mr. Cramer.

Freeman for the School Board.

The board called the landlord, Mr. Warren, in support of their contention that the claimant was only a monthly tenant and not a quarterly one, but the magistrate held, from the evidence given and the quarterly receipts produced, that Mr. Cramer was now really a yearly tenant, though when he first occupied the premises his rent was paid monthly.

The claimant was called, and stated that he had been served with a notice to quit by the board, but that under Mr. Fuller's advice he had taken no heed of it, and that subsequently the board served him with a notice to treat. He further stated that his net profits amounted to about £23 or £24 a week, and that he generally had four or five men at work for him, and that the compulsory removal might prove a serious loss to him.

Mr. Edmond F. Fuller, of the firm of Fuller and Fuller, surveyors, of Bucklersbury, gave evidence on behalf of Mr. Cramer, and he stated in his evidence that no formal claim had been sent in, as Mr. Young, the board's surveyor, would not entertain the matter, and declined to make any offer whatever, as he considered he had no legal right to compensation, being under a proper notice to quit; but it now being considered otherwise by the magistrate.

Mr. Fuller stated that the claimant was entitled to a year's profits at least, or £200, in addition to some £10 or £12 for removal, and £26 4s. 6d., the value of his trade fixtures and fittings; and that he had had considerable experience in matters of this kind, and had arranged over a hundred claims last year on a similar basis, and that had the business been one of a cash trade over the counter the amount would have been greater, as the claimant would then be entitled to eighteen months' profits, which was his unexpired interest in the premises in question.

In answer to Mr. Chance, Woolf stated that the total estimate would be about £248.

Mr. Charles J. Barker, a surveyor of King William-street, was called on behalf of the board, and stated that £228 would be a fair compensation, as the claimant had no shop, and the premises were small.

Mr. CHANCE remarked on the extraordinary and wide difference between the surveyors, and after asking Mr. Fuller a few more questions, he awarded the claimant £200 as compensation, and £32 7s. for costs, including £10 10s., Mr. Fuller's charges.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

STOLEN PROPERTY—ACTION AGAINST CONSTABLE FOR DETINUE.—The plaintiff was committed for trial, tried, and acquitted, on a charge of stealing a diamond pin and ring, which were found in his possession. The defendant, a superintendent of police, into whose possession the pin and ring had lawfully come in the course of the criminal proceedings, did not deliver them to the plaintiff on his acquittal; but within a reasonable time afterwards applied to a magistrate under sect. 29 of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, for an order "for the delivery of the said goods to the party who should appear to the magistrate to be the rightful owner thereof, or such other order as to the magistrate should seem meet." The magistrate, on the application being made, heard evidence which was tendered both for the plaintiff and the defendant, and adjourned the further hearing to a distant day. Before the expiration of that day the plaintiff brought his action against the defendant for the detention of the goods. The defendant set out the above facts in his statement of defence, and that no order had yet been made by the magistrate. The plaintiff demurred. Held (affirming the decision of Cleasby, B. in the Exchequer Division below) that, no order having been made by the magistrate under sect. 29, the plaintiff's action was not maintainable: (Bullock v. Dunlop, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 194. Ct. of App.)

TURNPIKE—TOLL—EXEMPTION—CARRIAGE EMPLOYED IN HER MAJESTY'S SERVICE UNDER THE MUTINY ACT.—By sect. 86 of the Mutiny Act (39 Vict. c. 8) a toll collector is made liable to a penalty if he shall demand and receive toll (inter alia) "for any carriages or horses belonging to Her Majesty, or employed in her service, under the provisions of this Act." By sect. 68, for the regular provision of carriages for Her Majesty's forces and their baggage in their marches, power is given to constables, upon warrants issued by justices within their several jurisdictions, to provide carriages and horses for employment in Her Majesty's service; and, the section proceeds to enact how and under what circumstances this can be done. The respondent, an officer in Her Majesty's service, in pursuance of an order to proceed from his official residence at one place to another in the Isle of Wight, made a part of the journey in uniform in his own dog-cart, drawn by his own horse, and upon arrival at the appellant's toll bar was charged a toll in respect of his carriage, which he paid under protest. It was necessary that the respondent should have a carriage to take several official books and things he was directed by order to take to his destination, and if he had hired a carriage the cost of hiring would have been allowed to him. The appellant having been convicted by justices under sect. 86 of 39 Vict. c. 8, for taking this toll: Held, on appeal that sect. 86 only exempted carriages employed under and by virtue of sect. 68 of the Act; that the carriage in question was therefore not employed in Her Majesty's service under the provisions of the Act, and that the conviction was accordingly wrong: (Hinds v. Parry, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 216. Ex.)

LEGAL NEWS.

A PARLOUR car is a novel place to hold court, but a Special Term of the United States Circuit Court was held a short time ago in one. A hearing of a motion for the appointment of a receiver for a railroad began in Milwaukee, and as Judge Drummond, before whom it was made, desired to go to Chicago, the argument was continued aboard a parlour car, en route, and concluded in the court room in Chicago.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES FOR INFRINGEMENT OF PATENT.—The case of Birdsall v. Coolidge, recently decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, was for the infringement of a patent. The principal question was in relation to the measure of damages. The court below charged the jury in substance and effect, "that when a person, without license, appropriates the patented invention of another, the measure of damages, if a royalty has been established, is the regular royalty paid by purchasers and licensees; that if the jury find for the plaintiff the damages will be the royalty which the plaintiff established for that part of the invention used by the defendant." The Supreme Court in reversing the decision of the court below, after stating the rule under a prior patent Act not now in force, say: "Courts could not, under that Act, augment the allowance made by the final decree as in the case of the verdict of a jury, but the present patent Act provides that the court shall have the same powers to increase the decree, in its discretion, that are given by the Act to increase the damages found by verdicts in actions at law. Such difficulties could never arise in an action at law, nor can it now, as both the prior and the present patent act authorises the court to enter judgment on the verdict of the jury for any sum above the verdict, not exceeding three times that amount. No discretion is vested in the jury, but they are required to find the actual damages, under proper instructions from the court. Still, it is obvious that there cannot be any one rule of damages prescribed which will apply in all cases, even where it is conceded that the finding must be limited to actual damages. Frequent cases arise where proof of an established royalty furnishes a pretty safe guide both for the instructions of the court and the finding of the jury. Reported cases of undoubted authority may be referred to which support that proposition, and yet it is believed to be good law that the rule cannot be applied without qualification, where the patented improvement has been used only to a limited extent and for a short time, that in such case the jury should find less than the amount of the license fee; and it is admitted in several cases that the circumstances may be such that the finding should be larger than the royalty: (Seymour v. McCormick, 16 How. 490; Curtis on P., 4th ed., 459; Livingston v. Woodward, 15 How. 569; Dean v. Mason, 20 id. 203.) Evidence of an established royalty will undoubtedly furnish the true measure of damages in an action at law, where the unlawful acts consist in making and selling the patented improvement or in the extensive and protracted use of the same, without palliation or excuse, but where the use is a limited one and for a brief period, as in the case before the court, it is error to apply that rule arbitrarily and without any qualification: (Packet Co. v. Sikes, 19 Wall. 617; Russell v. Demig, 2 Otto; Suffolk Co. v. Hayden 3 Wall. 320.) Actual damage is the statute rule, and whenever the royalty plainly exceeds the rule prescribed by the patent act, the finding should be reduced to the statute rule.—Albany Law Journal.

THE BANKRUPTCY BILL.—Mr. Welton, of the firm of Quilter, Ball, and Co., accountants, offers some remarks upon the Bankruptcy Bill:—"The 104th and 106th clauses of this Bill," he says, "are those which define 'fraudulent pretences,' and it may be well to point out that the wording of clause 106 very clearly recites the legal doctrine which, since the decision in Butcher v. Stead, has prevailed. Upon that decision Mr. W. T. S. Daniel, Q.C., Judge of County Courts, in a paper read before the Social Science Association last autumn, remarked as follows:—"Its effect is to establish that fraudulent preferences are for all practical purposes so far legalised that debtors may commit the frauds with impunity, and creditors may retain the fruits of such frauds with safety, provided (if they have not applied for their debts, in which case pressure alone would suffice to legalise the fraud) that they have been mere passive recipients of their debts, and were ignorant of the debtor's insolvent condition and fraudulent motive in making the payments. Sanctioned by the supreme authority of Butcher v. Stead, a trader knowing himself to be insolvent may now even prepay such creditors as he pleases, taking a rebate for such prepayment, and then having perpetrated this flagrant injustice upon his other creditors, may file a petition, &c." If, for instance a merchant learns that he has been ruined by the failure of a correspondent abroad, nothing hinders him from at once may fairly be classed amongst the contingencies of railway travelling for which a company is not responsible, and do not come within the category of wilful delay or restless loitering, which, according to Lord Justice James, are the true tests whether a company has duly performed its contract as carriers of passengers. If it were otherwise it might happen, as was suggested by his Lordship in Re Blanche's case, that a passenger delayed by reason of a stoppage occurring a hundred miles away, and upon a distinct portion of the railway, might call in question the conduct of the entire staff of the company throughout their whole system. This would obviously be most unreasonable, and bearing in mind the necessity which exists in the interests of the public safety for implicit obedience to signals, and the consequences, both to passengers and to companies, which might follow the disregard of them, I think that the exceptional delay which occurred in this instance, however inconvenient to the plaintiff, does not amount to a breach of the company's contract with him, which, it must be remembered, is not a contract guaranteeing the arrival of their train at the stated time named in the printed bills, but simply to use all reasonable efforts to ensure its arrival at that time. Under these circumstances I feel it my duty to find a verdict for the defendants. The learned judge refused to grant any costs beyond costs of witnesses, because the plaintiff before coming into court had applied to the company for an explanation of the delay, which explanation had not been furnished.

BANKRUPTCY DECISIONS IN THE YEAR 1876.

ADJUDICATION.

The plaintiff, as the person in whom the estate of J. W., a bankrupt, was, on the adjudication being annulled, vested by order of the court under sect. 81 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, sued the defendant under the common counts for a debt due from him to J. W. for work done by J. W. before the bankruptcy; to which the defendant pleaded a set-off by way of mutual credit at the time of the adjudication, for debts due before the bankruptcy from J. W. to the defendant, and for damages provable in bankruptcy, and which would have been provable against the estate of J. W. had he still continued to be a bankrupt; and on demurrer.

Held, that the plea was good, inasmuch as since under sect. 81 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, the bankrupt's property vested in the plaintiff, subject to the right to set-off debts provable in bankruptcy, the defendant had the same right of set-off against the plaintiff suing as such assignee, as he would have had against the trustee in bankruptcy had the bankruptcy not been annulled.

Sect. 28 enacts that "the approval of the court shall be conclusive as to the validity of any such composition or scheme, and it shall be binding on all the creditors so far as relates to any debts due to them and provable under the bankruptcy."

In the interpretation clause the words "debt provable in bankruptcy" include "any debt or liability provable in bankruptcy."

By sect. 28 it is further provided that "the provisions of any composition or general scheme made in pursuance of the Act may be enforced by the court on a motion made in a summary manner by any person interested, and any disobedience of the order of the court made on such motion shall be deemed to be a contempt of court."

Per Cleasby, B.—These provisions clearly show that the arrangement or scheme of settlement still remains under the control of the court, and it is subject, therefore, to the ordinary rules of bankruptcy with respect to the right of set-off: (West v. Baker, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 102.)

AFTER ACQUIRED PROPERTY.

After an order closing a bankruptcy has been made the bankrupt, although he has not obtained his certificate of discharge, is entitled to the property which he subsequently acquires: (Re Pettit's Trusts, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 51.)

ASSIGNMENT OF CHOSE IN ACTION.

By a deed made between the debtors of the first part, trustees of the second part, and the several persons joint and separate creditors of the debtors who names and seals are hereunto set and affixed, of the third part, after reciting that the parties of the first part stood indebted on their joint account to the several persons and in the several sums set opposite their respective names in the schedules thereunder, and were also severally indebted to certain other persons, and that, being unable to pay their joint and separate creditors the whole of their demands, they had agreed to convey all their joint and separate estate to the parties of the second part in trust for themselves and the rest of the creditors rateably and in such proportion as the same joint and separate estate would be distributable under a fiat of bankruptcy, and that the parties of the second and third parts had agreed to release the said debtors; the parties of the first part, "by and with the consent of the said creditors parties hereto," conveyed all their estate, &c., to the parties of the second part, upon trust to convey the same and "to pay and apply so much of the said trust moneys as should arise from the conversion of the said partnership property of the said debtors, in and towards payment and discharge of the several debts due and owing to the several joint creditors of the said debtors parties hereto of the second and third parts, or so much of the said debts as the said trust moneys will extend to pay rateably and in proportion, but so as the same shall be paid and applied in the same way as would be done in bankruptcy," and to pay and apply so much of the said trust moneys as arose from the conversion of the separate estate of the debtors respectively in payment of their separate debts. The deed contained also a covenant by the trustees to make a faithful distribution of the moneys "unto and amongst the several joint and separate creditors of the said debtors according to their respective rights and interests, and the true intent and meaning of those presents;" a release of the debtors by the parties of the second and third parts, and a declaration that the trustees should take all possible steps for making the said deed "binding upon all creditors of the joint and separate estates of the debtors, whether parties to the deed or not."

It was admitted that the deed, which was duly registered, was executed by all the joint creditors, but no sums or amounts were set opposite their names, and it was not suggested that there was any creditor who had not taken his benefit under it.

In an action by the plaintiffs suing in their own name, as trustees under the deed, for a debt, accruing due from the defendant to the debtors before the date of the deed, it was Held by the Court of Exchequer, making absolute a rule to enter a verdict for the plaintiffs, that the evident intention on the face of the deed being that it should be a good deed under the Bankruptcy Act 1861, and one by which all the creditors would be entitled to benefit, the words appended to the description of the parties of the third part, apparently limiting its operation to the creditors "whose names and seals are hereunder set and affixed," might be rejected as a falsa demonstratio, and that they did not control or overrule the general intention of the deed that all the creditors, and not a portion of them only, were to be benefited. But that, at all events, the deed as against the defendant, who was not a party to it, was good to pass a chose in action, and the trustees might sue in their own names: (Durant v. Robinson, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 617.)

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE PROFESSION.

NOTE.—This Department of the LAW TIMES being open to free discussion on all professional topics, the Editors do not hold themselves responsible for any opinions or statements contained in it.

RULES OF THE SUPREME COURT—CONSTRUED DIFFERENTLY BY THE RECORD AND WRIT CLERKS AND THE COMMON LAW MASTERS—COPIES MARKED AS OFFICE COPIES.—How is it that in the Common Law Divisions one has to pay 6d. per folio for office copies of judgments, although the copies are almost invariably made by solicitors, while at the Record and Writ Clerks Office, if the copy is made by the solicitor, only 2d. per folio is charged? How is it also that solicitors are allowed the costs (if proper to be made) of making the copy, while the Common Law Masters not only decline to allow the cost of copying, but also charge the same fees as if the copies were made in the masters' office? These inconsistencies ought not to exist, and I venture to submit the masters are wrong. The schedule to the order of 28th Oct. 1875 sets out what fees are to be taken in the various offices, and amongst others the following: For examining a written or printed copy and marking same as an office copy, for each folio, 2d.; for making a copy and marking same as an office copy, for each folio, 6d. The Common Law Masters seem to decline to allow solicitors the privilege of making their own copies, but I hope they will alter a rule which appears to me to be misconceived and unfair.

A WEST END MANAGING CLERK.

THE COUNTY COURTS ACT 1875.—I fail to see that "A Subscriber" has made out any case for altering sect. 1 of the County Courts Act 1875. The suggestion that every defendant should be compelled to disclose his defence by affidavit before obtaining leave to defend, cannot be entertained for a moment, having regard to the class of suitors who resort to the County Courts, and the frequency of the sittings of these courts.

Many of the defendants are very poor and illiterate persons, and could not frame such an affidavit, nor ought they be required to do so. If a defendant gives a notice of intention to defend when he has no defence, he does so at the peril of being up the costs against himself, for he would then be liable for the further expenses incurred by the plaintiff, i.e., the advocate's fee and costs of witnesses. Now it often happens that a plaintiff requires the debt to be paid forthwith, or at a much earlier date than the defendant is able, consequently the latter is driven to give a notice of defence as the only mode of obtaining reasonable terms for payment. In our County Court, if a defendant in such a case admits the debt, and only wants time, the registrar disposes of the matter; so that it is not the fact that the plaintiff is put to the "inconvenience of having to appear before the judge instead of the registrar." Your correspondent appears to think it a great grievance that "at the hearing the judge has power, notwithstanding there is no defence, to determine when the debt shall be paid, and whether in one sum or by instalments." Surely it is most proper that the judge should have this power, and it is difficult to see on what grounds he ought to be deprived of it. I cannot understand why the Profession and the President of the Legal Practitioners' Society should be invited to move for an alteration in the Act on such slender grounds as those disclosed in the letter of "A Correspondent."

W. H. P.

JUDGMENTS—UNIFORMITY.—In the LAW TIMES of the 3rd Feb., a form of judgment was given which is used in the Queen's Bench Division after the trial of an action sent from the High Court to the County Court, pursuant to 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, s. 26. If this were followed up by other approved forms of judgments, and other proceedings, it would be of great service to the seventy-three district registries throughout the kingdom, and would be an effectual means of bringing about that uniformity in forms the absence of which has caused much inconvenience to practitioners, and has frequently been pointed out in the columns of the LAW TIMES. Under the sixty-three orders appended to the Judicature Acts, a great variety of judgments, more than twenty in number, may become necessary according to the peculiar circumstances attending each action, and yet in the appendix of forms not more than eight or nine forms are given for the guidance of the solicitor. The consequence is, that in some registries a complete medley of incongruous forms would be introduced were it not for the supervision of the officials. A clerk is sent with a blank sheet of paper to sign judgment, and is left to his own intelligence, or to the officials, for the correct form to be adopted. "Chitty's Forms" may be of some little help as a guide, but under the altered practice they are, in most cases, comparatively useless. Now that we have one Supreme Court of Judicature in England, we ought to have one uniform system in all common forms of proceedings, and as no book has yet been published as a guide containing them, the LAW TIMES could, by acting on the above suggestion, be an efficient means of bringing uniformity into existence, and of rendering very material aid to those whose duty it is to prepare the requisite forms. Judgments of the High Court are now models of conciseness and brevity, and are important documents, have frequently to be produced in other courts, and ought to be similar in form both in London and the district registries. Forms of the different judgments required under Orders XIII. and XXII., rules 8, interlocutory as well as final, would be very useful, especially in those cases where the action is for recovery of land, and there is also a special indorsement for rent and a claim for mesne profits on the writ. Judgments under these rules are less frequently signed than those under other rules, and therefore, if the authorised London forms were given, they would be adopted in the country in place of the crude specimens sometimes presented in district registries, originating, apparently, in the inexperienced brain of an office boy.

A COUNTRY CLERK.

[We agree with you as to the necessity for uniformity in forms used in the High Court. We have already given several forms, and we have frequently directed attention to the many unnecessary differences in such forms as used in the Common Law Divisions in London alone.—EN. SOLS. DEPT.]

A FREER INTERCHANGE BETWEEN THE TWO BRANCHES OF THE PROFESSION.—In a recent issue, when discussing the question of passing from one branch of the Profession to the other, after setting out the clause relating to stamp duty, in the Legal Practitioners' Society's Bill, you go on to say that "while solicitors contribute £105 to the public exchange, besides certificate duty," barristers only contribute £75." illustration of this it was urged that if one of the persons concerned in homicide were taken, tried for murder, and convicted of manslaughter, and the harbourer was simultaneously convicted or acquitted of being accessory, then, in the event of another of the principals being afterwards caught, tried, and convicted of murder could the accessory, it was asked, plead autrefois acquit or convict to a second charge of harbouring the perpetrators of the homicide? The Court, however, found no difficulty in solving the question in the affirmative. Lord Chief Justice COCKBURN observed that the difficulty as to what a man could plead if put a second time on his trial with respect to the same transaction could be met. The harbouring of each of divers principals—if a man harboured more than one—was a distinct and separate offence, although their act had been joint, because each principal was severally guilty of the particular offence, notwithstanding the fact that they might be jointly indicted. With respect to the case before the Court his Lordship remarked that, inasmuch as a man indicted for murder could be found guilty of manslaughter—since the crime of murder involved an act of homicide, it might be manslaughter—so an accessory put upon his trial as accessory before or after a murder could be found guilty of the minor offence. This settles definitely a rather novel point of law.

THE SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE (ADDITIONAL JUDGE) BILL.

THE Act which bears the above title has virtually become law, and in a few days' time we may hope to see the new Judge installed at Lincoln's-inn, and assisting the MASTER of the ROLLS and the VICE-CHANCELLORS in working off the rather formidable arrears which confessedly at the present time exist in the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice. We took occasion some few weeks ago to call attention to the fact that the arrears at Lincoln's-inn were very different to those at Westminster, and suggested that whereas the services of an additional Judge were evidently required at the former place, the present staff might probably prove sufficient to dispatch the business at the latter if only a better distribution of judicial power could be arranged. It is even possible (as Lord CAIRNS hinted) that another Judge could be added to the Chancery Division (when required) at the expense of the common law division, if only the reform intended to be effected by the Judicature Act were more zealously carried out by those in authority. At present, however, the common law Judges have got quite as much business as they can manage, though we cannot altogether agree with the remarks made by Lord COLERIDGE on the 'subject' in the House of Lords on the discussion of the Bill. There is a deal of public time thrown away at present which might be utilised in such manner as to get through some of the special and common jury causes, and that without increasing the labour of the judges. In the first place nobody can fail to perceive that the additional rules issued last December have been the means of setting aside in part the intention of the Legislature as expressed in the Appellate Jurisdiction Act of last session. It is as clear as clear can be that Parliament intended the business in banc to be transacted as far as possible by one judge, and never contemplated that the rules to be framed under the Act would be such as practically to keep up divisional courts much the same as before, with the exception of two judges sitting instead of three. We must not be understood as expressing an opinion that the change was a salutary one in the interest of suitors, or whether the old courts in banc, consisting of three or even four judges, did not after all transact the business more satisfactorily, and prevent the necessity and expense of resorting to the Court of Appeal, save in exceptionally important cases. It is no doubt true that to "evade an Act of Parliament is not to break it;" still, it is to be regretted that the rules should have reserved to divisional courts the right for instance to hear "special cases, if both parties wish it," a class of business which, of all others, might well be left to the determination of a single judge. And (as if the exceptions were not sufficient) in the Queen's Bench Division all the special cases set down for argument are marked to be heard by two judges. Probably this is a blunder on the part of some of the officers of the court: but if not it only shows how absurd the rule is, which permits parties in the most trumpety cases to take up the time of two judges, while important demurrers have to be decided by one. So that in the Queen's Bench the services of one judge are sometimes thrown away, just as was the case through the last sittings. Then, again, how long is this distinction to be kept up between the three divisions at Westminster, so that the judges will not assist one another as occasion may require? If, as sometimes happens, the business set down in the paper is not sufficient to occupy the day in a divisional court, why should not the judges who compose such divisional court help to clear the list from one of the other divisions? These different divisions, as at present maintained, are in reality a great evil in a public point of view, and if they could only be united under one chief, the business of the country would be got through far more satisfactorily and expeditiously than at present, and at less expense. Lastly, the business ought to be made subservient to the Nisi Prius business. The arrears in the former are very moderate, and ought to be worked off altogether with ease before the summer circuit's commence. The list of causes on the other hand is somewhat formidable, and but faint endeavours are made to grapple with it. The sittings at Nisi Prius are most irregular, and instead of thirty-six courts sitting every week, that is, two courts for each division for six working days, probably there are not, on the average, more than half that number. Assuming such sittings to be held there would still be left sufficient judges to constitute a divisional court besides, and one to spare. Where, however, the services of some of the Judges are required elsewhere, care should be taken not to interfere with the trial of causes, and by this means the arrears would soon vanish into thin air. Indeed, there is no reason whatever why three courts at Nisi Prius should not be able to sit on odd days in one or other of the divisions, if only the judicial labour could be better distributed. Complaints were made last sitting in one of the divisions that no sufficient accommodation could be obtained; but, as Lord CAIRNS has already pointed out in the House of Lords, the complaints were altogether groundless. Unless the courts should be again constituted as they were prior to the passing of the Judicature Acts, we are inclined to agree with the LORD CHANCELLOR that the appointment of additional Judges in the common law division is uncalled for. At all events, such an appointment would be premature at present, and we agree that it is better to wait awhile, until the recent changes have been fairly tested, so as to enable us to form a definite opinion on the subject.

There is another clause in the Bill which we are glad to see has been inserted by Lord CAIRNS during its progress in the House of Lords, namely, that which relates to the titles of the Judges. The Judges in the Court of Appeal are to be styled "Lords Justices," and those in the other divisions of the High Court "Justices." This will prevent a repetition of what occurred the other day at Westminster. KELLY, C.B., in the Exchequer, remonstrated with a junior for calling Mr. Justice HAWKINS (we may now properly style him so) either "Baron" or "Justice." MELLOR, J., the following day, protested with some emphasis against his being styled "Sir Henry," adding that his own proper title was "Mr. Justice." The reporter for the Times in the Exchequer Division was not unnaturally bewildered by these divergent opinions, and accordingly styled him afterwards Sir HENRY (or Mr. Justice) HAWKINS. Outsiders perhaps may be inclined to think that the public time might be better employed, and that it is far from edifying to hear learned Judges wrangling about such trifles as what is or is not the proper title for a Judge appointed since the passing of the Judicature Acts, in open court. For ourselves, if any interest still attaches to the subject, we have no doubt that the opinion of KELLY, C.B., was the more correct, and that the only other proper style of address was that of "Judge" HAWKINS, the title assigned by the Judicature Acts (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 5. This opinion is fortified by the clause we have alluded to, as inserted by Lord CAIRNS in the present Bill—a clause which would be meaningless if the title were acquired merely by virtue of the office.

AGENCY--AGENT'S RIGHT TO COMMISSION WHEN THE CONTRACT IS ENTIRE OR FOR A DEFINITE PERIOD. (a)

THERE is a class of cases in which the agent has been engaged for a definite period at a fixed salary, with or without an additional commission, varying with the amount of business transacted by him on behalf of his principal. If the agent is prevented by the principal's default or bankruptcy from completing his services under the agreement, the amount he will be entitled to claim must depend upon the terms of the agreement. If it fixes the amount payable upon the happening of any such an event, further calculation will not be needed, and he will be entitled to claim the sum named in the agreement: (Ex parte Logan, L. Rep. 9 Eq. 149.) It is presumed, however, that this will be the rule only when the amount named in the agreement can be taken to be the reasonable damages, and not greatly in excess of the sum to which the agent would become entitled in the event of the agreement being fully performed. If, on the other hand, the agreement makes no provision for the happening of such an event, then the agent will be entitled to the value of his salary for the full period of his engagement, subject, it may be, to certain deductions, as in Yelland's case (infra). But if the agent is to be paid a commission, he may make no claim in respect of prospective commission, but will be limited to what he has actually earned: (Ex parte Maclure, infra.)

In Yelland's case (L. Rep. 4 Eq. 351), 1867, Y. was engaged as manager of a bank for a term of five years, with liberty to act as agent for another company, at a salary of not less than £500 a year. Before the expiration of the agreement the bank stopped payment, and Sir W. Page Wood, V.C., held that Y. was entitled to claim the value of an annuity of £500, terminating on the day on which the agreement expired, subject to a deduction, the amount of which was calculated at chambers, by reason, first, of his having been at liberty to act as agent for another company under the agreement; and, secondly, of his freedom upon the winding-up of the bank to seek fresh employment.

This decision was acted upon in 1869 by Vice-Chancellor James, in Ex parte Clark (L. Rep. 7 Eq. 530), although some doubts existed whether the agreement in that case was not ultra vires. The question came before the court on an application by the liquidators of a limited trading company, that C. might be ordered to pay the sum of £1000 in respect of a call of £20 per share. C. at the same time made an application under an agreement between himself and the company by which he had been appointed their agent, at a salary, for five years, in addition to commissions. It was further agreed that he should take fifty shares of £100 each, and pay up at once £2 per share; but the company agreed that he should not be called upon to make any further payment in respect of those shares. The call was made in respect of those shares. The company was wound-up within fifteen months of the date of the agreement, and the agent's services put an end to in Jan. 1868. It was then agreed that £4000 was to be reserved out of the proceeds of the goods to meet C.'s claims against the company. Of this sum £1000 was to be paid to C. on account of his claims, without prejudice; the remaining £3000 was to be deposited in the Victoria Bank in the joint names of the liquidators and C. to abide the result of proceedings in a colonial court. The Vice-Chancellor held that, independently of the agreement, the liquidators had by their conduct precluded themselves from enforcing against C. the payment of the call without bringing debts due to him into account, and that he was entitled to his full salary to the end of the five years.

The question raised in the two cases, so far as they relate to the agents' right to the payment of salary, was decided the same way in Ex parte Maclure (L. Rep. 5 Ch. 737) by the Master of the Rolls; but the Court of Appeal was asked to say that an agent might also claim for prospective commission. The agent, in addition to his salary, was to be paid a commission of 10 per cent. on all business transacted. The Master of the Rolls disallowed the claim, and this decision was affirmed on appeal. Reliance was placed on the principle that if A. sells a man all the apples from his apple tree, he has no right to cut down that tree; if he does so he is guilty of a breach: (See McIntyre v. Belcher, 14 C. B. N.S. 654.) But, as Lord Justice James pointed out, the principle was inapplicable in the claim for commission. "That," said his Lordship, "is essentially different from a man saying, 'I am going to try and sell apples, and I will give you 10 per cent. upon the profits of the sale of them.' That must, of course, depend upon the amount of apples which the man who enters into the speculation will buy, and what price he will be able to sell them at. In such a case the other party could not say 'You are not making profits because you are going to a wrong market, and buy upon bad terms. You have not sufficient capital, and you are selling at a loss in order to get money. Therefore, I am entitled to damages for the improper mode in which you carry on your business.'"

Where the agreement provides for the payment of a liquidated sum to the agent in the event of his being deprived or removed from his office, no deductions will be made, as in Yelland's case (sup.); but the whole amount named may be claimed: (Ex parte Logan, L. Rep. 9 Eq. 149).

Where an agent contracts to do an entire work for a specific sum, he can recover nothing unless the work is done, or unless it can be shown that it was the defendant's fault that the work was incomplete, or that there is something to justify the conclusion that the parties have entered into a fresh contract. Hence, when a sailor hired for a voyage took a promissory note from his employer for a certain sum provided he proceeded, continued, and did his duty on board for the voyage, and before the arrival of the ship he died, it was held that no wages could be claimed either on the contract or on a quantum meruit: (Cutter v. Powell, 6 T. Rep. 320.) So where a seaman entered into articles of agreement to serve on board a ship bound from the port of London to the South Seas to procure a cargo of sperm oil and to return, and was to receive a share of the profits in lieu of wages, it was stipulated in the agreement that no one of the officers or crew should be entitled to his share of the net proceeds of the cargo until the money had been received by the sellers, nor unless all stipulations had been performed under the agreement. On her voyage home the vessel was disabled and condemned in a foreign port. The cargo was transhipped, and, with the exception of a small portion, sold for repairs, was delivered in London and the freight upon it paid. The seaman accompanied the cargo in the vessel to which it was transhipped, but died before it reached London; and the Court of Exchequer held that the representatives of the seaman were not entitled to his share of the proceeds of the cargo under the agreement, but only to a quantum meruit for his services on board the second vessel: (Jesse v. Roy (1 C. M. & R. 316). In a later case it was stipulated by a building agreement between A. and B., that A. should complete for a specified price certain works on certain houses of B., the whole to be completed on a specified day, and to be done to the satisfaction of a surveyor named, upon whose approval payment was to be made. A. failed to complete the work. He sued B. upon the agreement for the price agreed, and on a common count, for a reasonable price according to measure and value. At the trial there was evidence that B. had resumed possession of the houses. It was held that there was no evidence to go to the jury in support of the plaintiff's claim; for that he could not recover on the special count, not having fulfilled it, and that the mere fact of B.'s taking possession of his own land on which buildings had been erected, or where repairs had been done or alterations made to a building thereon, did not afford an inference that he had dispensed with the conditions of the special agreement under which the works had been done or of a contract to pay for the work actually done according to measure and value: (Munro v. Butt, 8 E. & B. 738.) So, where the plaintiff undertook for a specific sum of money to repair and make perfect a chandelier, then in a damaged state, and did repair it in part, but did not make it perfect, it was held, that he could not, in an action of assumpsit, recover for the value of the work done and materials found: (Sinclair v. Bowles, 9 B. & C. 92.)

A case much in point was referred to by Mr. Justice Lawrence in Cutter v. Powell (sup.). In that case (Salk. 65) debt was brought upon a written instrument by which the defendant's testator had appointed the plaintiff's testator to receive his rents, and promised to pay him £100 per annum for his service; the plaintiff proved that the defendant's testator died three-quarters of a year after, during which time he served him, and he demanded £75 for the three-quarters. Judgment having been given for the plaintiff in the Common Pleas, the defendant brought a writ of error, and it was argued that without a full year's service nothing could be due, and the court reversed the judgment. The same learned Judge distinguished the case of a common hired servant, on the ground that he is considered to be hired with reference to a general understanding that a servant shall be entitled to his wages for the time he serves.

THE EFFECT OF CONDITIONS ON THE BACK OF CLOAK ROOM TICKETS.

A COMPARISON of the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the recent cases of Parker v. The South Eastern Railway Company, and Gabell v. The South Eastern Railway Company, which were delivered on the 25th inst., with the case of Henderson v. Stevenson (L. Rep. 2 H. of L. 470), decided by the House of Lords a couple of years ago, shows how rarely the principle of the last case may be applied for the purpose of rendering railway companies liable for the loss of luggage left in their care. In the two cases in which the South Eastern Railway was the defendant, the facts were very similar, and they were argued together. At the trial it appeared that the plaintiffs deposited goods in the defendant company's cloak room, and received the ordinary ticket. On the back of these tickets is a printed notice that the company would not be liable in the event of any loss by carelessness of servants to any amount above £10. The attention of the plaintiffs was not directed to this notice, and in the first of the cases the plaintiff swore that he had not read the terms endorsed on the ticket, and did not know of them at the time. The goods deposited were lost, and in the action brought to recover their value, the company set out the notice contained on the back of the ticket. The Judge directed the jury that they should consider whether under the circumstances the plaintiff was under any obligation in the exercise of proper care to read or make himself aware of the conditions indorsed on the ticket. A verdict for the plaintiffs was given in both cases. The Court of Appeal, however, decided that there must be a new trial on the ground of misdirection.

In Henderson v. Stevenson, it will be remembered, the respondent took from the appellants a ticket for conveyance in the appellant's steamboat from Dublin to Whitehaven. On the face of the ticket were the words "Dublin to Whitehaven," on the back of the ticket were printed a notice that the ticket was issued on the condition that the company should incur no liability whatever in respect of loss, injury, or delay to the passenger or to his baggage. In the appellants' office there was also hung up a time bill, and a general notice to the same effect. The respondent had neither read nor did he know what was printed upon the back of the ticket, nor was there evidence that he ever saw the general notice. The House of Lords dismissed the appeal, upon grounds succinctly stated by the Lord Chancellor. "The present case," said his Lordship, "is a case in which there was no reference whatever upon the face of the ticket to anything other than that which was written upon the face. Upon that which was given to the passenger, and which he read, and of which he was aware, there was a contract complete and self contained, without reference to anything dehors. Those who were satisfied to hand to the passenger such a contract complete upon the face of it, and to receive his money upon its being so handed to him, must be taken, as it seems to me, to have made that contract, and that contract only with the passenger; and the passenger on his part receiving the ticket in that form, and without knowing of anything beyond, must be taken to have made a contract according to that which was expressed and shown to him." His Lordship thought it was simply a question of common sense. Lord Chelmsford went to the extent of saying that "by a mere notice without such assent, they (the appellants) can have no right to discharge themselves from performing what is the very essence of their duty. . . . I think that such an exclusion of liability for negligence cannot be established without very clear evidence of the notice having been brought to the knowledge of the passenger, and of his having expressly assented to it." Those words are very strong, but it must not be forgotten that they relate to the duties of carriers and not those of warehousemen.

The Judges of the Court of Appeal were unanimous in deciding that there should be a new trial in the two cases before them, but they differed upon minor points. Lord Justice Mellish thought that the jury should be asked whether the company had done what was reasonably sufficient to give notice of the condition. Sir Richard Baggeley confessed that he should have found for the plaintiffs in both cases upon the evidence, and although he concurred in thinking there should be a new trial, was convinced that the result would have been the same had the question been put in the correct form. Sir Geo. Bramwell thought, on the other hand, that the plaintiff's claim was bad in law. He was of opinion that if the plaintiff knew there was printed matter on the tickets he was as much bound by the terms it contained as if he had read them, or as if the porter had called his attention to them. His Lordship distinguished the case from that of Henderson v. Stevenson, on the ground that the plaintiff there was not aware of the conditions on the ticket. In spite of the fact that a new trial was ordered, it cannot be said that the law is rendered clearer by the result. The Judges were not agreed as to whether the question was one of fact or of law; they were not agreed whether knowledge in the plaintiff, if not of the terms contained on the back of the ticket, but of the fact that there was printing there, amounted to a sufficient assent to those terms in the absence of evidence that the existence of such terms was generally known, and even in the matter in which all were agreed—namely, the necessity of a new trial—one of the learned Judges was clear that the same verdict must result, though the jury were properly directed. Under such circumstances, it will not be a matter of surprise if the cases in question should again find their way into the Court of Appeal.

THE ABOLITION OF LOCAL VENUES AS AFFECTING THE JURISDICTION OF THE ENGLISH COURTS.

By Order XXXVI., rule 1, of the Judicature Act 1875, local venues are henceforward abolished. It becomes, therefore, of great importance to ascertain the exact bearing of the law of venue upon the question of jurisdiction, and to inquire whether a provision of procedure, the object of which was to sweep away what had become a purposeless and cumbersome fiction, does not carry with it consequences of a graver and more substantial character than those which the Legislature had in view in passing it. The origin of making parties state in their pleadings the exact venue or district in which the transactions in question had taken place was that the jury might be summoned from that neighbourhood, the jurymen of that age being the witnesses of more modern times. Gradually a distinction grew up between local and transitory actions, the former being those where the cause of action was connected with realty, and the latter those where it was not. It was with regard to the former class only that it was necessary to obtain a jury from the vicinity, and in the latter class of actions the plaintiff might lay his venue where he pleased. Hence, the venue in transitory actions became no more than the plaintiff's election of a county in which his action should be tried, whereas the venue in local actions had to be laid in the county where the cause of action really arose. And though the original object of the venue was in the former actions in great measure defeated, it still served the purpose of fixing the county from which the jury should be summoned. Consequently, when the cause of action arose out of England, a fiction was invented, not for the purpose of enlarging the jurisdiction of the English courts, but in order that the place where the action was to be tried might be fixed by the regular procedure. In such cases, the venue was laid in an English county; and where it was necessary to state in the declaration that the cause of action happened abroad, then the venue was laid truly with a videlicet naming an English county. But the fiction did not apply to actions of a local character; in those the venue had to be truly laid, and no videlicet was allowable. Hence it happened that, owing entirely to a purely formal distinction, no cause of action with regard to land arising abroad could be recognised by the English courts of common law. On the other hand, all causes of action of a transitory nature, wherever arising, were within their jurisdiction. In the well-known case of Mostyn v. Fabrigas (1 Sm. L. C., 7th edit., 658), Lord Mansfield hesitated as to whether one alien could sue another in England for an assault committed in France, on the ground that it must have been laid to have been contra pacem domini regis. It is unnecessary to consider now whether his doubt was well-founded or not, as the necessity for using the words in question was done by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 49; it would seem, however, that it was erroneous, as the contra pacem was never traversable. Subject to the condition that the injury is actionable both by the law of this country and by the law of the country where it was committed, there can be no doubt now that such an action would lie. (See the remarks of Lord Justice Selwyn in The Halley, L. Rep. 2 P. C. 193; 37 L. J. Adm. 33.) The judgment of the Master of the Rolls in Cookney v. Anderson (31 Beav. 466), and those of Vice-Chancellor Malins in Matthei v. Galitzin (L. Rep. 18 Eq. 338), and Doss v. Secretary of State for India (L. Rep. 19 Eq. 509), suggest an exception to the above rule in the case of contracts made abroad between aliens, and of which the subject-matter is abroad. But all the dicta in those cases can certainly not be supported; and as in each of the three cases the subject-matter of the contract was land, the decisions form no exception to the rule referred to. Whether those decisions can be supported will have to be considered in relation to the jurisdiction of the courts over matters in which the venue was local. For the present, it is sufficient to point out that there is an ancient maxim of law, "Debitum et contractus sunt nullius loci," and which seems to be too general in its terms to bear any exception, such as might be gathered from the expressions used in the judgments referred to. It is true that those were the expressions of equity Judges; but the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery can hardly have been less extensive than that of the courts of common law in this respect. For the proposition that a contract between two foreigners made in their own country is triable here, there is the authority of Co. Litt. 261 b.; and see Bulwer's case (7 Rep. 3 a.). But it is not necessary to go to ancient authorities to refute the view taken by the then Master of the Rolls in Cookney v. Anderson (ubi sup.), and by Vice-Chancellor Malins in Matthei v. Galitzin and Doss v. Secretary for India (ubi sup.). The case of the Buenos Ayres and Eusemada Port Railway Company v. Northern Railway Company of Buenos Ayres (L. Rep. 2 Q. B. D. 210; 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 145) was decided on Feb. 2, 1877, and is reported in the current number of the Law Reports. That was an action for use and occupation of a railway station in Buenos Ayres, and the statement of defence denied the jurisdiction of the High Court, on the ground that the contract was made in a foreign country, that it related to the use of property in such foreign country, and that both parties were domiciled in that country. On demurrer to this part of the statement of defence, judgment was given for the plaintiff, on the ground that there was nothing in the allegations in the statement of defence to oust the jurisdiction of the English courts, when both parties are within the jurisdiction; that the alleged convenience of one tribunal over another for the investigation of the claim was beside the question of jurisdiction; and that there was no violation of the comity of nations in entertaining such a claim in this country. The doctrine laid down by the writers on international law is quite in accordance with these principles. Vattel says that the proper tribunal is that of "the Judge of the place where the defendant has his settled abode, or the Judge of the place where the defendant is when any sudden difficulty arises, provided it does not relate to an estate in land, or to a right annexed to such an estate." (Vattel, b. 2, ch. 8, s. 103.) "All persons who are found within the limits of a government, whether their residence is permanent or temporary, are to be deemed subjects thereof." (Huberus, tom. 2, lib. 1, tit. 3, sect. 2, p. 538.)

The more difficult question remains to be considered as to whether the limited jurisdiction of the English courts with regard to questions relating to realty, situate outside their jurisdiction, depended in whole or in part upon the technical law of venue. It will be seen that in the passage from Vattel, cited above, he lays it down as a proposition of international law that the accidental presence of a defendant in a country will not give the courts of that country jurisdiction where the question in dispute relates to an estate in land (out of the jurisdiction), or to a right annexed to such an estate. According to Story, the theories of international law are at one with the principles of the law of England in this respect. But he assumes an à priori distinction between local and transitory actions, and leaves altogether unnoticed the circumstance that this distinction was founded on what was purely a matter of procedure. In the case of Mostyn v. Fabrigas (ubi sup.), Lord Mansfield lays it down that there is a formal and a substantial distinction as to the locality of trials; the formal distinction being that of venue and arising from the mode of trial; the substantial distinction being, "where the proceeding is in rem, and where the effect of the judgment cannot be had if it is laid in a wrong place. . . . So if an action were brought relative to an estate in a foreign country, where the question was a matter of title only and not of damages, there might be a solid distinction of locality." How far, if at all, this substantial distinction existed is a question that could never have arisen in the courts of common law, as, whatever it was, it was included in the distinction of form. Mr. Justice Lush, in his work on Practice, after stating the rule that "actions the venue in which is by law local cannot be tried here unless the causes of action arose within the jurisdiction of the courts," goes on to say: "It is the local jurisdiction of the courts, or the topical limits within which their process is effective, which defines the nature and extent of their jurisdiction over local actions. . . . No action of a local nature arising in places where the ordinary process of the courts has no force, can be brought in the courts of this country." But for this he cites no authority. With regard to actions in rem, it is not unimportant to remember that the Judicature Act allows of alternative claims, and that now, therefore, every action in rem may resolve it itself into a claim for damages. But, as in the Court of Chancery there was no distinction of form, there the distinction of substance, if any, would arise. And accordingly we find several cases, which turn upon the question of jurisdiction, argued in that court upon general principles. That the Court of Chancery will indirectly act upon real property situate abroad through the instrumentality of their authority over the person, seems to be unquestionable. (See 1 Eq. Ab. C. p. 133; Arglasse v. Muschamp, 1 Vern. 75, 135; Kildare v. Eustace, 1 Vern. 75, 135, 419; Foster v. Vassal, 3 Atk. 589; Cranstown v. Johnston, 3 Ves. jun., 170, 5 Ves. 277; Penn v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Ves. 444; 2 Tudor's L. C. 923.) In the last mentioned case, specific performance was decreed of articles executed in England concerning boundaries of two provinces in America. Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, in the course of his judgment, said: "As to the courts not enforcing the execution of their judgment; if they could not at all, I agree, it would be in vain to make a decree; and that the court cannot enforce their own decree in rem, in the present case; but that is not an objection against making a decree in the cause; for the strict primary decree in this court as a court of equity is in personam, long before it was settled whether this court could issue to put into possession in a suit of lands in England; which was first begun and settled in the time of James I., but ever since done by injunction or writ of assisa to the sheriff; but the court cannot to this day as to land in Ireland or the plantations. In Lord King's time, in the case of Richardson v. Harrison (Attorney-General of Pennsylvania), which was a suit of land and a house in the town of Philadelphia, the court made a decree, though it could not be enforced in rem. In the case of Lord Anglesey of land lying in Ireland, I decreed for distinguishing and settling the parts of the estate, though impossible to enforce that decree in rem, but the party being in England, I could enforce it by process of contempt in personam and sequestration, which is the proper jurisdiction of this court. And indeed, in the present case, if the parties want more to be done, they must resort to another jurisdiction."

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Thursday, April 19.

LAW BILLS.

The Exoneration of Charges Bill and the Contingent Remainders Bill passed through committee, and were reported.

Friday, April 20.

JUSTICES' CLERKS BILL.

The report of amendments in this Bill was received and agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SUMMARY CONVICTIONS.

Mr. HORWOOD moved the second reading of this Bill, which aims at amending the administration of the criminal law in many minor points with a view to rendering it more merciful. Among other things, it proposes that the magistrates should have power to inflict a fine in certain cases which are now punishable only by imprisonment, and allows security to be given for the payment of the fine. It also alters the qualification for magistrates, vests their appointment in the hands of the Home Secretary, and provides for the appointment of stipendiary magistrates.

Mr. GREGORY, who moved the rejection of the Bill, seconded by Mr. Rodwell, relied chiefly on the fact that the Government had also introduced a Bill on the subject, which ought to be considered first. The discussion, which was prolonged until past five o'clock, turned chiefly on the propriety of proceeding with the Bill at this time. Mr. Stansfeld supported the measure, and Sir H. James, also agreeing with it, suggested that the debate should be adjourned, and that the Bill should be taken along with the Government measure. Mr. Whalley, Mr. Herschell, Mr. Mundella, and Mr. Serjeant Sherlock were of this opinion; while Mr. Russell Gurney thought the measure so full of objectionable provisions that it was not worth while giving it a second reading. Mr. Morgan Lloyd, the Solicitor-General, Mr. Pell, and Mr. Paget criticised the details of the measure in a hostile spirit; and

Mr. Cross while admitting that there were many points in the summary jurisdiction which required amendment—such, for instance, as appeals, the committal of young children, &c.—pointed out that the subject had not only been mentioned in the Queen's Speech, but that he himself had recently introduced a Bill, which stood for a second reading. In these circumstances, it would have been more courteous had Mr. Hopwood deferred the second reading. He entertained such decided objections to parts of this Bill that he could not assent to the second reading; and his first impression was to ask the House to reject it, but, on the whole, he was willing to acquiesce in the course suggested by Sir H. James, and Mr. Hopwood, if so minded, could endeavour to embody his ideas in amendments to the Government measure.

Mr. HORWOOD, in the course of his reply, offered to consent to a postponement; but the House would not allow this course to be taken.

A motion for adjournment was negatived by 219 to 165, and on another division being taken, the Bill was thrown out by 228 to 164.

The Hypotheek (Scotland) Bill occupied the remainder of the sitting. Mr. Vans-Agnew moved the second reading without comment, and Mr. Gregory spoke against it up to a quarter to six.

Mr. Morgan Lloyd's Criminal Law Practice Amendment Bill was read a second time.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

We have elsewhere referred to the vigilance of the council of the Irish Law Society. Below we publish a circular letter which has just been sent by that body to the secretaries of the Incorporated Law Society of the United Kingdom, the Legal Practitioners' Society, and other similar organisations. This circular letter is as follows:—"I am directed by the council of this society to request the earnest attention of your society to the 10th clause of the County Officers and Courts (Ireland) Bill, which has been introduced into the House of Commons by the Government. By that Bill it is, amongst other things, sought to amalgamate the office of clerk of the Crown at the assizes with that of clerk of the peace and registrar of the County Court, and vest the patronage of the united office in the Government. At present, with some few exceptions, the offices of clerk of the Crown and of clerk of the peace and registrar of the County Court are filled by solicitors; but the Government propose to render eligible for appointment to the united office, amongst others, any person who "shall have held an office in one of the Superior Courts at Dublin for ten years at the least;" and, without in any way desiring to suggest that the patronage extending over such a very wide circle of officials of every grade, would be improperly exercised, this council consider it would be both detrimental to the interest of the public and unjust to the solicitors of Ireland, to give to unprofessional persons an office which, from the nature of the business transacted by the holder, is peculiarly within the province of a solicitor. The council feel that the question is not a narrow one, in which the interests either of the public or the solicitors of Ireland are alone involved, but that the public and solicitors of England are equally, if not more, interested in trying to prevent the precedent of important legal appointments being conferred on unprofessional and perhaps incompetent persons. And holding that opinion, the council have to ask for the assistance of your society in trying to prevent the clause passing in its present very objectionable form. This council laid before the Lord Chancellor of Ireland some observations on the Bill, and they objected to the above proviso, first, because it is directly contrary to the recommendation contained in the report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons, ordered to be printed the 6th July 1868, by which it is reported that the new officer (i.e., the clerk of the Crown and peace), should be a professional man; secondly because it is directly contrary to the provisions of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 24, regulating the qualification of registrars of County Courts in England, whereby it is enacted that the registrar "shall be an attorney;" thirdly, because it is in direct opposition to the principle laid down by the Government, and acted upon for many years past, that only solicitors shall be appointed clerks of the Crown; fourthly, because the duties which will have to be performed by the clerk (of the Crown and peace, in relation to the equitable jurisdiction of the Civil Bill Courts, will be identical with those performed by a chief clerk in Chancery; and it is enacted by the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 44, s. 12, that such chief clerk shall be a practising solicitor; fifthly, because the office of clerk of the peace has, in some instances, been conferred by the Custodes Rotulorum on persons who have not been solicitors; and, on account of the public injury caused thereby, it is now sought to vest the patronage in the Crown, which would be unjust if the wrong to the public is to be perpetuated in another form. Other cogent reasons may suggest themselves to your society, and this council feel assured they may rely on the cordial assistance of your society towards furthering the efforts of this council in what they believe to be for the interests of the public and the Profession in both countries." We hope that the concluding appeal to English Law Societies will not be lost sight of. If this innovation on professional rights in Ireland is accomplished, it will speedily be made a precedent for similar incursions in England. Either it is important that only experienced professional men should be appointed to the offices named in this letter, or it is not; if not, we can only say that the special claims of the Bar to advocate must go with those of solicitors, and, indeed, it will come to this, that laymen are to be declared as fit as lawyers to undertake that class of work for which lawyers always have been specially trained. We hope that some joint and vigorous action will be taken by the English and Irish, and indeed Scotch law societies, in the matter here dealt with.

We have often pointed out that there are many matters in which the Incorporated Law Society of the United Kingdom might with advantage follow the sister society in Dublin. For instance, the Irish society annually elects thirty-two members to serve on the council of the society, and looking at the number of the members of the English society as compared with that of the Irish society, and the strength and number of the solicitors in England represented by the English society, as compared with the number of solicitors practising in Ireland, it is evident that the council of the English society ought to be at least doubled in number, and, indeed, we have before argued that every country law society which bona fide exists and conducts the ordinary work of such an organisation, ought to be represented on the governing body of the chief law society in London. The Irish Law Society has two vice-presidents—one would appear to be sufficient—while the committees of the Irish society consist of, No. 1, equity, conveyancing, Landed Estates Court, and costs; No. 2, Parliamentary and costs; No. 3, law and bankruptcy and costs; No. 4, library and finance. We incline to think it would be well if the labours of our own council in England were distributed in a somewhat similar manner. We have before us a copy of the last annual report of the council of the Irish Law Society, from which it appears that the action of that body in resisting encroachments on their professional rights is somewhat more successful than are the like efforts of the council of the English society. For instance, the effort of the Irish society was partly successful in obtaining restrictions upon Order XI., schedule 1, of the rules of the Supreme Court, which deals with service of English process in Ireland. This provision is described in the annual report of the Irish society as "the obnoxious order," as to which we also read, "your council would, however, recommend to their successors not to re-satisfied with this concession of the English Lord Chancellor," &c. Again, in regard to the appointment of others than solicitors to certain Government legal posts, the representations of the council of the Irish society appear to have had the desired effect; at all events, the appointment of Irish solicitors followed in connection with several vacancies, especially those of Clerks of the Crown for various counties. Then, again, they have secured for solicitors' clerks relief from serving upon juries. The Legal Practitioners (Ireland) Act was the work of the Irish Incorporated Law Society, which in this respect simply adopted the English Act, which was the work of the Legal Practitioners' Society in London. The Clerk of the Peace and of the Crown (Ireland) Bill, which proposed to qualify non-professional men for the office was withdrawn owing to the action of the Irish Society, and so in the case of the Civil Bill, Courts (Ireland) Bill, and the Registry of Deeds Office (Ireland) Bill. The Irish Law Society applauds the vigorous action of the Scotch Law Society of Solicitors in regard to the service of English process in Scotland, but it is plain enough that the Irish Society is not wanting in energy to defend the interests of Irish Solicitors.

We complained to no purpose of the appointment of a member of the Bar to the office of Solicitor of the Treasury. The Council of the Incorporated Law Society had its say on the same subject, as will be seen by a reference to its annual report for 1876, but also all to no purpose; like appointments to public offices have frequently been made since. The appointment having been made, it was only fair to expect that the duties would be undertaken by the professional man who secured the office. But it seems that this is not the case. The following is reported as having taken place on a recent occasion in the House of Commons.

Mr. W. H. SMITH, in reply to a question by Mr. Charles E. Lewis (solicitor) as to the practice of the Treasury in employing private solicitors in bankruptcy and other prosecutions, said that private solicitors were sometimes employed, but they were employed on the usual terms and not on the understanding that they should return one-half the fees to the Solicitor to the Treasury. The result of the practice had been a saving of between £6000 and £7000 a year to the public.—Mr. C. LEWIS gave notice of his intention in committee of supply to call attention to the subject, and to move a resolution.

The Secretary to the Treasury then told Mr. Lewis that the new system of nursing treasury prosecutions effects a saving to the country, though how this can be we really cannot see. We have made inquiries upon this subject, and we are given to understand that it is now the practice of the Treasury solicitor, when taking up a prosecution, to say to the solicitor who takes preliminary steps in the proceedings for a private client, "You can conduct this prosecution for me in future, but on agency terms," that is, that the solicitor is only to charge half fees. We believe this is the case in regard to the recent conspiracy prosecution at the Old Bailey, and was so in the case of the prosecution of Mr. Ernest Scott Jervis. If it is necessary that business should be nursed in this way, we contend that the private firms of solicitors who conduct Government prosecutions should be paid their full charges. The Government will do well to confer with Lord Redesdale, who entertains very strong views about "agency" charges in parliamentary business. This system at the Treasury is neither a healthy nor a worthy one. The Treasury Solicitor's salary should be reduced, and the solicitors employed paid their full charges, and be held responsible for the proper conduct of the prosecution. Mr. John Slater recently addressed a letter to the Times, in which he complained that a prosecution which he instituted had been taken out of his solicitor's hands by the Treasury solicitor, who had placed it in the hands of another private firm.

No less than five affidavits have come under our notice this week, in which the commissioner administering the oath is thus described: "A commissioner to administer oaths in the Supreme Court of Judicature." We have always contended, and we still insist, that the words "in England," at the end of the above description are absolutely necessary. In this view we are borne out by Mr. Ford, who deals with the point in his handbook on oaths. But, assuming that the point is now a doubtful one, it cannot long so remain, for when we have a Supreme Court of Judicature in Ireland, the words "in England" will be necessary in the case of affidavits sworn in the English court, and "in Ireland" in the case of affidavits sworn in the Irish court.

REFERRING to the recent publication by us of the cause list for the present sittings at Westminster, a correspondent—whose letter we print elsewhere—points out that the present system, under which the daily cause lists are issued, and by which are shown the names of the causes which will be taken on the following day, occasions much inconvenience to a large number of solicitors who practise in the city of London, and who are compelled, when they expect an action to come on, to send all the way to Chancery-lane every evening for perhaps a fortnight to see if the particular case is in the paper. The fact is, a copy of each daily list should also be posted at Guildhall or elsewhere in the city.

We have received two letters from correspondents upon the subject of our recent remarks in regard to the use at the Common Pleas offices of impressed stamps for entering appearances, and at the other common law offices of adhesive stamps for the same purpose. We publish one from an official in the Common Pleas offices, who rightly enough points out that the officers in this division are without any option in the matter, as the use of impressed stamps is rendered compulsory by an order of 22nd April 1876 (not 22nd May, as stated by our correspondent). The fact, however, remains, and our correspondent does not dispute it, that the Queen's Bench officials still allow the use of adhesive stamps on entering an appearance; and that the Profession would prefer the use of adhesive stamps we can hardly doubt, for the reason that the forms with stamps impressed, which are sold at Somerset House, are of thin paper, and are easily mislaid and rendered useless, and, further, because while a clerk can at a moment's notice buy and affix an adhesive stamp to a form previously prepared by him in his own office, he cannot so conveniently do so in the case of forms with impressed stamps, unless they are kept in the office. Therefore, the use of impressed stamps should at most be optional when entering an appearance.

In another column we report the proceedings at a half-yearly general meeting of the members of the Solicitors' Benevolent Association, which was held at the Law Institution, Chancery-lane, on Monday last. The report of the directors appears to be satisfactory: 104 new members have been admitted since last October. The Board has distributed a sum of £1004 5s. 9d. in grants of assistance during the past half-year. The anniversary festival of the association is announced to take place at the Albion Tavern Aldersgate-street, on Wednesday, the 6th of June, under the presidency of Mr. Justice Field, who formerly practised as a solicitor in the City of London. The presence of a judge of the High Court of Justice will necessitate the abrogation of the rule as to the exclusion of members of the Bar from being present on such occasions. We should be glad to know that efforts are yet to be made to amalgamate this society with the Law Association.

OUR attention is called to a point of some importance in connection with orders giving leave to defend under Order XIV., rule 1, of the Rules of the Supreme Court. The printed forms used at the Common Law Judges' Chambers run as follows:—"The defendant to be at liberty to defend this action, the said defendant to deliver statement of defence eight days after the delivery of plaintiff's statement of claim." Order III., rule 6, provides for such a sufficient endorsement of the plaintiff's claim on a writ of summons, as to entitle him to an order under Order XIV., rule 1, and supposing a defendant in entering an appearance states that he does not require a statement of claim to be delivered, it yet seems from the above form of order that it is imperative on the plaintiff to deliver it, notwithstanding the provisions in Order XXII., rules 2 and 3, the latter providing that where leave to defend is allowed under Order XIV., rule 1, the defendant shall deliver his defence, if any, within the time named in the order, and if no time named, then within eight days after the order. There can be no doubt that Order XXI., rule 4, read by the side of Order XXII., rule 3, shows an intention to dispense with statements of claim in the case of writs which are sufficiently endorsed with particulars. It seems clear that the above form of order under Order XIV., rule 1, is entirely incorrect as enforcing the delivery of statements of claim on plaintiffs. The proper order would be one simply giving leave to defend, so that in ordinary cases defendant would have to deliver his defence within eight days from the date of the order, and in default the plaintiff would be entitled to sign judgment. We hope this point will receive due attention, as the present form appears to us to render nugatory the several provisions to which we have referred. We contend that the defendant in such cases is not entitled to a statement of claim, nor even to a notice in lieu thereof, under Order XXI., rule 4.

We published a few weeks ago a letter addressed by a London solicitor to the editor of the Irish Law Times, upon the subject of commissions for oaths under the Irish Judicature Bill. The following appears in the annual report of the Irish Law Society on the same subject: "The 75th section provides that every person who at the commencement of the Act should be authorised to administer oaths in any of the courts thereby transferred to the High Court of Justice, should be a commissioner to administer oaths in all causes and matters which may be depending in the said High Court or in the Court of Appeal. The council, however, do not think this section sufficiently comprehensive, and are of opinion that the powers given by the 81st section of the 30 & 31 Vict., c. 44, should be incorporated, mutatis mutandis, in the present Bill—serious difficulties having already occurred in the reception of affidavits in law and probate cases, and in the Registry of Deeds Office, owing to the present defective state of the law in this respect." The fact is, the present uncertainty in Ireland as to the powers of commissioners for oaths there, is to be increased tenfold by the Irish Judicature Act. In fact, Irish commissioners are to be confronted with the same doubts and difficulties as we are troubled with in England and Wales.

ALTHOUGH no particular form of notice of appearance to a writ of summons is necessary, the following may be relied on as one suited to the purpose:

1877. No. .

In the High Court of Justice. Division. .

Between plaintiff, and . defendant.

We have this day appeared for the defendant .

defendants, naming him or them, to the writ of summons issued out of the above-named division on the day of 187 .

Dated this day of 187 .

Solicitor for the said defendant.

To Solicitor for the plaintiff.

We are aware that many solicitors give a shorter notice of a much less formal character; indeed, similar to that which was usually given before November 1875.

THE expression of our opinion upon the decision of the High Court of Justice in the case of Angel v. Jones, heard on Tuesday last, will no doubt be looked for. The plaintiff is a solicitor, and the defendant (Miss Jones) was his client, who he represented in an action in which she was plaintiff. While the first action was pending the plaintiff, Miss Jones, gave Mr. Angel a note in writing to the effect that she would pay him one-fifth of what she recovered in the action (one for breach of promise of marriage) beyond his proper costs and charges. On taxation the Master disallowed this fifth, which came to £210. It was again disallowed by a judge at chambers, and on Tuesday last again by the Divisional court. We are sure that Mr. Angel has mistaken his professional position. A solicitor's proper professional costs and charges—as they are at present allowed, and whether they secure to solicitors a sufficient remuneration or not—are all that he can fairly ask his client to pay. Mr. Prentice, Q.C., in urging Mr. Angel's claim, spoke of "diplomacy" being necessary as well as a knowledge of law by a plaintiff's solicitor in such an action; but there is no separate scale for "diplomacy," whatever Mr. Prentice may mean by that expression. We understand Mr. Prentice contended that Mr. Angel could enforce his claim under 33 & 34 Vict. c. 28 (the Attorneys' and Solicitors' Act 1870); but, as we have often pointed out, this is not the case in such claims as that which, we are sorry to say, Mr. Angel has attempted to enforce. The 4th section of this Act only provides for the remuneration of solicitors by an agreement to pay a fixed sum, but such an amount is only to be enforced after it has been allowed by a taxing master. It cannot be said that Mr. Angel's agreement was a "fair and reasonable one." We hope to hear no more of attempts to enforce such agreements.

We believe that the difference in practice in the Common Law Divisions in regard to certificates of no appearance, to which we have already called attention, still continues. In the Common Pleas Division a shilling stamp is required, not only for searching, but also for the certificate of no appearance. In the Queen's Bench Division no charge whatever is made for this certificate. There is no doubt that in this matter the practice of the Common Pleas is correct.

wherewith to charge any person upon any promise to marry, unless the alleged promise shall have been committed to writing and signed by the party chargeable therewith." Messrs. Deakin, Duke, and F. G. Hayes supported the affirmative side of the question; and Messrs. Tyler, W. E. Taylor, Soutter, Hornblower, Edwards, Chatwin, Shore, and Cochranes the negative. A vote of thanks to the chairman closed the meeting.

LAW STUDENTS' DEBATING SOCIETY.

At the meeting of the society held at the Law Institution, Chancery-lane, on Tuesday, 24th April (president Mr. Rouse), the question for discussion was, "Should the jurisdiction of County Courts be extended in accordance with the principle of Mr. Cowen's Bill now before Parliament?" Mr. Betts opened the debate in the negative, but at the close the question was decided in the affirmative—most of the members present voting in favour of the principle of the Bill.

LEEDS LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

THE last meeting of the spring session of this society was held on the 23rd April last in the Philosophical Hall. Mr. E. Tindal Atkinson, barrister, was the chairman. The secretary read the report of the committee, which stated that the society was in a very flourishing condition, and consisted of sixty honorary and twenty-nine ordinary members. The attendance throughout the session was represented to have been very good, the average being seventeen. The general desire manifested by the individual members to promote the success of this new society has been remarkable.

The subject for discussion was, "Is it expedient that the law of bills of sale should be so altered as that their registration should be an absolute protection to the holder without possession taken?" Mr. Meredith, the treasurer of the society, opened the subject in the affirmative, and Mr. Shaw, the secretary, introduced the negative. The question was decided in the affirmative. Votes of thanks were accorded to the chairman, the secretary, and the treasurer at the close of the meeting. The society meets again in October.

LIVERPOOL LAW STUDENTS' ASSOCIATION.

THE eighth general meeting of this society for the present session was held in the Law Library, Cook-street, on the 23rd inst., Mr. A. A. Millar in the chair. A letter from the secretary (Mr. T. Melhuish), resigning his office, was read by the chairman. The resignation having been accepted, a vote of thanks to Mr. Melhuish for his past services was proposed by the chairman, seconded by Mr. Morton, and carried unanimously. Mr. C. A. M. Lightbound and Mr. F. Broadbridge were proposed to fill the office of secretary, and will be balloted for at the next meeting.

Mr. J. W. Thompson then opened the debate in the affirmative upon the following question: "Where a party to a contract required by the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds to be in writing signs such contract as a witness to the signature of another person, will his signature be sufficient to satisfy the statute so as to render him liable on such contract?" Mr. Lightbound followed in the negative, after which an animated discussion ensued, in which Messrs. Norton, Rodgers, and Broadbridge joined. Mr. Thompson having replied, the question was put to the meeting by the chairman, and decided in the negative by a majority of ten. There were twenty-eight members present.

NOTTINGHAM LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

AN ordinary meeting of the above society was held in the Grand Jury Room, Town Hall, Nottingham, on Friday evening, the 20th April, Mr. C. L. Rothera, B.A., vice-president of the society, in the chair. The question for the evening's discussion was "That Mr. Norwood's Barristers' Fees Bill is worthy of support." Mr. H. Wyles, solicitor, Nottingham, supported the affirmative of the question, and Mr. R. H. Buckley the negative. In the discussion which followed, Messrs. W. H. Stevenson, C. S. Watson, Elborne, Perry, Lake, Barber, and Phillimore took part, and the question on being put to the vote was decided in the affirmative, by five votes to two. There were twelve members present.

PLYMOUTH, STONEHOUSE, AND DEVONPORT LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

THE thirteenth and last meeting of this society for the session 1876-77 was held at the Athenæum, Plymouth, on Friday, the 20th inst., the President (J. Shelly, Esq.) in the chair. The chairman reported that a circular, as prepared by the committee, had been sent to all the ordinary members of the society, asking if they would be willing to attend a dinner about the commencement of the next session, the price of tickets, without wine, not to exceed 10s.; but it was found that more than half the members had answered in the negative, and that therefore Mr. Helpman would not bring forward his motion. In pursuance of notice given by circular of the election of two gentlemen to audit the accounts for the past session, Mr. Guy and Mr. Oliver were proposed, seconded, and duly elected. The president then gave an address on the preparation of wills, at the close of which Mr. Wolferstan and Mr. Harrison also spoke on the same subject. Mr. Harrison then moved a vote of thanks to the president, which was seconded by Mr. Matthews, and carried unanimously.

UNITED LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

THIS society met at the Law Institution on Monday evening, the 23rd inst., at 7.30, to discuss the legal point mentioned in our last week's journal. Mr. Shirley Shirley, B.A., presided. Mr. S. Ward opened the debate, and was followed by Messrs. Archibald, Moyle, Pickersgill, and others. Ultimately the question was affirmed by a majority of four. Afterwards an exceedingly animated impromptu discussion took place, each member present speaking upon a particular subject selected by the chairman. At the ordinary weekly meeting of the society, held at Clement's Inn Hall on Wednesday, the 25th inst., Mr. F. B. Moyle in the chair, the following subject was mooted: "That Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister should be legalised." Mr. Eilsart opened the debate, and, after an animated discussion, a majority of twenty were in favour of the affirmative.

QUESTIONS FOR THE INTERMEDIATE EXAMINATION.

I.—Preliminary.

Questions 1 to 5 inclusive.

II.—From Chitty on Contracts.

6. What are the three descriptions of contract, and the principal distinctions between them?
7. What is a deed, and what an escrow?
8. What is a good, and what a valuable, consideration for a deed; and what is the difference between them as regards their efficacy?
9. What is the effect of marriage as regards the benefit to be derived from an unexecuted contract entered into with a feme sole, or the right to sue thereon?
10. What is the extent of a husband's liability on contracts of his wife made after marriage, and the principle on which any such liability exists?
11. What is a guarantee? What sort of consideration is necessary to support it? Give instances of considerations which have been held to be, and not to be, sufficient?
12. What is the effect of the Statute of Frauds as regards guarantees?

III.—From Williams on the Principles of the Law of Real Property.

13. If a married woman, entitled to estates in fee simple, survives her husband, what rights (if any) have the creditors or incumbrancers of her husband against the estates?
14. If the owner of an estate in fee simple in a rentcharge dies intestate without heirs, what becomes of the rentcharge?
15. On the bankruptcy of the trustee of a legal estate in fee simple what becomes of the legal estate?
16. What is the limit to the creation of executory estates or interests, so as to be within the rules of law against perpetuities?
17. What are the various kinds of incorporeal hereditaments?
18. What are the rights of a lord and his copyhold tenant with respect to timbers, and mines and minerals, under the copyhold lands?
19. If a married woman is possessed of a term of years, what power (if any) has her husband over it during the coverture?

IV.—From Haynes' Outlines of History.

20. In respect of what property, to which the husband becomes entitled in right of his wife, will equity interfere to protect the wife's interest?
21. How has a wife's reversionary interest in personal estate been affected of late years by statute?
22. Define the equitable doctrine of satisfaction, as between parent and child?
23. Where real estate is sold by the court for payment of debts and charges, and a surplus of the proceeds remains, is such surplus in its character real or personal estate?
24. An agent seeks to have an account taken of his dealings with his principal. Will equity assist him to enforce it?
25. Where a man, before marriage, covenanted to leave his intended wife a sum of money, and, dying intestate, her share of his estate, receivable by her under the Statute of Distributions, exceeded the amount, did that in any way affect the liability of his estate under his covenant?

26. A testator devises land out of which his widow is dowerable, and gives her a life interest in certain personal estate. Can she claim the dower, and also retain her life interest, or must she elect between the two?

V.—Mercantile Book-keeping.

27. Draw out a short balance-sheet containing seven or eight items on either side?
28. What is the difference between a cash book and ledger?
29. How would you provide for bad or doubtful debts in making out a balance-sheet?
30. How would you keep and check the account of your receipts and payments?
31. How are bills, payable at a future date, dealt with in a banking account.

QUESTIONS FOR THE FINAL EXAMINATION.

APRIL 1877—FIRST DAY.

I.—PRELIMINARY.

Questions 1 to 5 inclusive.

III.—PRINCIPLES OF LAW AND PROCEDURE (PAPER A, 10 A.M. to 1 P.M.)

In matters as administered under the usual jurisdiction of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice.

6. The lord of a manor mortgages it in fee, and afterwards, pending the security, purchases and takes surrender to himself in fee of copyholds held of the manor. Will the mortgagee have the benefit of them as security for his mortgage debt? Give a reason for your answer.
7. A testator dies in the present year possessed of two houses, one freehold and the other leasehold. Each has a mortgage upon it. By his will he devises the freehold house to A., and bequeaths the leasehold one to B., without, in either case, saying anything about the mortgages. He leaves an ample general personal estate. How will the respective mortgage debts be borne, and why?
8. If a receiver, appointed by the court, finds it necessary to pay money into a bank for safe custody, what precaution ought he to take to avoid being made liable in case of the failure of the bank?
9. What is the equitable principle on which the court acts in granting injunctions to restrain the use of trade marks?
10. A man is born of English parents in England, but goes to reside in France with the intention of remaining there permanently, and he thus obtains a French domicile. He afterwards leaves France, intending never to return, but without any definite views as to his future residence. He travels about for a time on the Continent, in the course of which travels he dies. What is his domicile at the date of his death, and why?
11. If one of a body of trustees, in good faith, with the sanction of his co-trustees and at a fair price, buys a portion of the trust estate, will the court set aside the transaction at the instance of the cestui que trust?
12. Trustees are directed by the instrument creating the trust to invest the funds on such securities as they may think safe. Will this justify the trustees in investing the trust funds in the debenture stock of a sound railway company in which they have confidence? Give your reasons.
13. A trustee is bound under the terms of his trust to invest the trust funds upon Government or real security. He fails to do so, and simply keeps the money in his own hands. What right have the parties beneficially interested against him? Would those rights be in any, and what way, altered, if the trust were simply to invest in Government securities?
14. If a trustee feels a doubt as to the course he ought to adopt in a matter of discretion as to the sale of the trust property or otherwise, can he, without suit, obtain the directions of the court on the subject, and in what way?
15. Under his marriage settlement A. has a life interest in a sum of £10,000, with an absolute power of appointment over it by will. In the year 1876 he executes a will, giving all his property to B., but without specially referring to the settlement, or the £10,000, and then dies. Does or does not B. take the £10,000? Give your reasons.
16. What are the remedies of a mortgagee under a well-drawn mortgage deed, and show how they differ from those of an equitable mortgagee by simple deposit of title deeds?
17. Define the difference between proceedings "in rem" and "in personam," and say in what way the Chancery Division of the Court acts, when it directs the sale of real estate subject to the trusts of a will.
18. What are the functions of the Conveyancing Counsel of the Court?
19. What is the meaning of an "Originating Summons," and state some of the cases to which it is applicable?
20. In what manner is evidence taken in the

them to make him compensation for damage done to him, or fence them in properly for the future. It would have been so very easy to have used words which would beyond all doubt have included the keeper of the pound, had such been the intention. I think that the Legislature thought the penalty of 20s. would be sufficient to induce the person impounding the animals to supply them with necessary food and water. . . . I do not think that it was intended by language of this description, "any person who shall impound or confine," that the pound keeper should have a penalty imposed upon him, which is distinctly imposed on the person bringing the animals to the pound and neglecting his duty. It cannot properly be said that the pound keeper caused to be impounded or confined, when he only did what he was obliged to do, viz., "keep the animals brought to him." Mr. Justice Lush, too, took the same view, and his judgment is peculiarly valuable, from the circumstance that it traces the law upon the subject from the 5 & 6 Will. 4 c. 59 (s. 4) to the last statute, and points out very forcibly the reasons why a mere pound keeper cannot come within the penalty supported on the part of the prosecution. In conclusion he says: "I think, therefore, especially as the Act was one imposing a new penalty, we must be very careful how we extend it to persons not mentioned in it. Many classes of persons are mentioned in other sections—keepers of slaughterhouses, &c.—and if this class of pound keepers had been intended, it would have doubtless been specified by name. I think the information was rightly dismissed, and our judgment must be for the respondent."

Had the decision in this case been otherwise, there can be no doubt that the position of a pound keeper would be one exceedingly onerous, since in the event of, say, a flock of sheep, or a herd of oxen, being impounded, his pecuniary means might be wholly inadequate to supply the animals with food, and he might be drawn into a state of embarrassment of the most serious description; whilst, on the other hand, by throwing this burden upon the distrainer who has a choice whether he will distrain or not, and has other remedies for damage done to his property by the animals, no injustice is done to anyone.

PUBLIC HEALTH—ELECTION—COUNTING OF VOTES—WHEN CERTIFICATE OF CHAIRMAN FINAL.—At an election of members for a local board of health, the chairman, acting under sect. 27 of the Public Health Act 1848, certified that seven persons, of whom the defendant was one, and had the smallest number of votes, were elected. The relator, who was a candidate, had three votes less than the defendant. Upon a scrutiny before a judge of assize without a jury, it appeared that by correction of mistakes in counting, the votes for the relator and the defendant were equal; that one vote for the relator had been mislaid and not counted at all; and that two votes for the relator which the chairman had found to be valid were in fact invalid, although no objection had been made to them at the time of their reception. Held (affirming the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division below), on a quo warranto, that mistakes made in the chairman's ministerial capacity alone could be inquired into, but that his certificate was conclusive as to all matters upon which he could, by using the means provided by the Act, come to a judicial decision, and that, therefore, the chairman's addition of the votes could, but the validity of the votes could not, be questioned: (R. v. Collins, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 192. Ct. of App.)

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

CHEQUE—INDORSEMENT AS AGENT—16 & 17 VICT. c. 59, s. 19.—An indorsement "per agent" is within 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59, s. 19. Plaintiffs, through K., whose name appeared on the invoices as their agent, sold goods to defendants. Defendants gave K. a cheque in payment payable to plaintiffs or order. K., without express authority, indorsed the cheque in plaintiffs' name, adding "per K. agent." The bankers paid, and K. failed to account to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs sued defendants for the money and in trover for the cheque. Held (affirming the judgment of the Common Pleas Division), that the bankers were justified under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59, s. 19, in paying the cheque, that there had been a good payment as between plaintiffs and defendants, and that plaintiffs could not recover. Held, also, on the facts, independently of the statute, that there was evidence that K. had implied authority to indorse the cheque, or that plaintiffs had held him out as their agent so as to justify payment on his indorsement: (Charles and others v. Blackwell and others, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 195. Ct. of App.)

COUNTY COURTS.

BRADFORD COUNTY COURT.

Feb. 16, 17, and March 16.

(Before W. T. S. DANIEL, Esq., Judge.)

BRADWELL v. BRIGGS.

Contract to deliver goods in a specified time—Waiver—Damages.

Yelverton (instructed by F. Clift, Cheapside, London) for plaintiffs.

West (instructed by Dawson and Greaves, Bradford), for defendant.

HIS HONOUR.—This action is brought to recover £45 2s. balance of account for goods sold and delivered, and money due upon account stated. The defence was, that the goods were not of value stated in the accounts mentioned, and that the defendants had not acquiesced in the accounts, and had paid the full value. And by way of set off and counter claim the defendants alleged that the goods were to be delivered in three weeks from the 22nd Dec., and that they should be well warped; that the plaintiffs had notice that the goods were required to be used in the manufacture of other goods which had been sold by the defendants to their customers, and had to be delivered within a limited time; and that the goods purchased by the defendants from the plaintiffs were to be delivered to the defendants within the required time agreed on, to enable the defendants to fulfil their contracts with their customers. The defendants allege a breach of this contract by the plaintiffs, and claim as damages for such breach £26 8s. for allowances they were obliged to make to their customers for delay in delivery; and £11 4s. 11d. for loss in sale of other goods refused acceptance and sold to other persons; and the further sum of £18 4s. for expenses incurred in making good bad warping. The defendants also allege that they sent the plaintiffs a draft for £118 18s. 9d., in satisfaction of what they the defendants alleged to be due, on the express condition that the draft should be accepted in full payment or returned, and that the plaintiffs retained and did not return the cheque. And the defendants claim under their set-off and counter claim, £14 0s. 11d. as overpaid by them to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs joined issue on the defendants' defence and counter claim. The questions to be decided between the parties are as follow:—The defendants admit that the plaintiffs claim for goods sold and delivered; but they allege that the goods were purchased by them under an express contract that they should be delivered in three weeks from the date of the contract, the goods being required to be delivered for a specific purpose within that time, of which the plaintiffs had notice. The plaintiffs deny any such contract. Upon this question the facts established by the evidence are these: On the 25th Nov. 1875 the defendants entered into a contract with Messrs. Firth and Co., of Bradford, for the delivery of a certain number of silk pieces required for the American spring market, part to be delivered on or before the 25th Jan. 1876, the remainder on or before the 15th Feb. A similar contract on the 7th Dec. 1875 for other similar pieces, to be delivered on the 15th Jan. 1876, or sooner. Another similar contract on the 18th Dec. 1875, for other similar pieces to be delivered on the 25th Feb. 1876. For the execution of these contracts silk warps were required. The defendants had had previous dealings with the plaintiffs for silk warps. On the 17th Dec. 1875, the day after the last contract with Firth and Co., the defendants wrote the plaintiffs as follows: "Have you got anything in 2 60, from 10s. to 11s. if so, please to send us samples by return." On the 18th Dec. the plaintiffs replied as follows: "We have yours of yesterday's date, and we will send you samples of what we have in 2 60 on Monday." The plaintiffs have places of business in London and Congleton. On Tuesday, 21st Dec., they wrote from Congleton to defendants as follows: "We are in receipt of your favour of the 17th inst., the contents of which we note. Inclosed we beg to hand you sample skeins of a parcel of 2 60 China dble. at 10s., and we trust the same will lead to business. Lot 2012, 2 60 China dble., 646lb. at 10s." On the same 21st Dec. the defendants replied to the plaintiffs as follows: "We are duly in receipt of your memo., dated 21st, with sample of 2 60 silk China, lot 2012, at 10s. per lb. We inclose warping particulars for the lot, and we must press upon you the importance of getting these warps sent off quick; you must not lose a moment with them, as our time for the orders is very limited—do your very best as regards delivery. Please to let us know per return how soon you can complete them." This letter was accompanied with three different sets of warping particulars, adapted to three different orders, 30 by 47, 31 by 47, 32 by 47, each dated 21st Dec. 1875, and identified as part of lot 2012, at 10s., and at the foot of one of them there was this memorandum: "All must be well warped, and have them well picked; all must be got off without a moment's delay." These warping particulars had special reference to the three contracts which the defendants had entered into with Firth and Co. for the delivery of pieces at the specified dates. The parties appear at this moment to have partially misunderstood each other. The plaintiffs were offering silk in skeins or bundles unwarped at 10s. The defendants wanted silk warped, and understood the offer to apply to silk warps. This misunderstanding was, however, immediately set right. On receipt of the defendants' letter of the 21st Dec., accepting the offer as applicable to warps, the plaintiffs telegraphed to the defendants as follows: "Yarn is in bundles—cannot warp it at the price. Shall we send it on? Bankruptcy at work—reason so cheap." The defendants immediately replied by telegraph, asking the extra price for winding and warping. To which the plaintiffs immediately replied by telegram, "Will cost 9d. per pound extra for warping, and we can commence at once; will write to-night." On receipt of this telegram the defendants wrote on the 22nd to the plaintiffs a letter in answer as follows: "In your communication of the 21st you did not state that the silk had to be in the bundle at 10s.; we never buy silk except in the warp, and all the business we have done with you has been in the warp; 9d. per pound is surely too much for warping it; if you will say 4d. you may go on at once. This is more than we ought to pay under the circumstances. Reply in the morning to 8, Leeds-road, Bradford." The plaintiffs, before they received this last letter from the defendants, wrote them on the same 22nd Dec., referring to their former telegrams, and adding, "We find it would take three weeks (can make a delivery this week) before we could complete them, as our means of warping are rather limited. Our idea was that you would have been able to get the warping done much cheaper and more quickly in Bradford. However, we shall be glad to know your wishes as early as possible." These two letters appear to have crossed, and the plaintiffs, on receipt of kept pressing you for the warps, and we told you we should have to reorder the warps, as we could not wait any longer. You undertook to deliver the order in three weeks, and you were seven weeks, and not complete then. We think we have been very liberal indeed taking them so long after time." On the 12th Feb. the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants as follows: "We have yours returning our invoice of the 7th inst., and note the remarks thereon. As we have before stated, the warps will not be of the slightest use to us if returned, and we think you ought to have some consideration for us in the matter. When you applied to us at the first, we told you that we would have preferred sending you the yarn in bundle, knowing that you could have got them warped in Bradford much sooner than we could do here; but when you insisted on having these warps, we got an estimate from the warpers here of the time it would take, and on which we acted, accepting the offer from you; and we certainly did our best to get you the warps in time, but bad winding and one thing or another prevented the warpers from completing within the time. Now, we have no legal remedy against the warpers, and therefore hope you will not throw on us a loss which can be avoided if you will try, we feel assured. You no doubt are aware that the yarn could not be bought at the same price to-day, and if any extended time of payment, or our meeting you in any other way could enable you to use them, we shall be glad, and we leave it with you, trusting that we shall have your favourable answer by return. P.S.—You can name your own time as to paying for the warps in dispute." To this letter the defendants replied, on the 15th Feb., as follows: "In reply to your favour of the 12th about the warps returned, you seem to forget altogether that we have got other warps to replace them, and they are of no more use to us than they are to you, as we have no orders for them, and it is entirely your own fault that they are left over. If the warps had been completed in a reasonable time we should have used them, and when we wrote about them you never gave us a definite answer when they would be complete, and we cannot give you an unlimited time for delivery, as you are quite aware we have a stated time given for the delivery of our orders, and if they are not delivered to a day they are cancelled." On the 16th Feb. the plaintiffs replied as follows: "We have yours of yesterday's date, and regret to learn that you cannot take the warps, which we will therefore thank you to return to our address." On the 23rd Feb. the defendants wrote the plaintiffs as follows: "Every warp we have dressed has been as badly warped as those we complained about 24th Jan. and they will cost a great deal dressing when we come to finish them; we can scarcely get through them." The correspondence as to the contract between the plaintiffs and defendants, and what was done and omitted to be done under it, ends here. I have gone through it at length for the purpose of showing generally, without commenting upon each letter, the grounds upon which I consider the following conclusions, which I have arrived at are warranted. I think the correspondence shows—First, that as between the plaintiffs and defendants there was a contract to warp the whole of the silk—lot 2012, 646lb. at 10s. 9d. a pound—according to warping instructions given by the defendants. That the plaintiffs appear to have made this contract upon the faith of an arrangement made by them with certain warpers, who have broken the arrangement both as to time, proper warping, and attention to warping instructions, and against whom they state they have no legal remedy; but the defendants were not parties directly or indirectly to that arrangement, and are not in any way liable to be affected by it. Their contract was entirely with the plaintiffs, and to them alone the defendants are entitled to look for its performance, and damages for its non-performance. Secondly, that from the very outset the plaintiffs had distinct notice that the warps were required by the defendants for the express purpose of enabling them to execute certain orders for goods which the defendants had contracted to deliver within a limit of time, and that the delivery of the warps in proper order and condition within the time specified (three weeks) or thereabouts, was necessary to enable the defendants to complete their contract, which, if not so completed, was liable to be cancelled. I am of opinion that it is not necessary that the plaintiffs should have been informed of the particular contracts which the defendants had entered into with their customer, or of the terms of such contracts; it is enough that the plaintiffs knew that such contracts existed, and that they were liable to be cancelled if deliveries were not made in the time specified by such contracts. Thirdly (assuming any question of waiver to be open to the plaintiffs, which I doubt), the plaintiffs knew that the warps after the three weeks, the defendants did not intend to use, and they did so at the request of the plaintiffs, and with the object and intention of enabling themselves better to complete their contracts with their customers, and thereby diminish the loss to the plaintiffs. Fourthly, that in consequence of the defendants not being able to deliver through the plaintiffs' delay in delivering the warps, according to their contract, certain of the defendants' orders for goods, which ought to have been delivered on the 25th Jan., were cancelled by their customers, and that defendants sustained a loss on the orders so cancelled, amounting to £226 8s. That loss was ascertained in this way. The customers having cancelled the orders, and the goods being thrown on the defendants' hands, they tried to sell them in the open market, but failed to do so, and then sold them to customers, as to forty pieces, at a reduction of 5s. a piece; as to eighty pieces, at a reduction of 2s.; and as to forty pieces, at a reduction of 4s. a piece, making together £226 8s. I also find that a large number of the warps were badly warped, and had to be re-dressed and made up again into warps before they could be used in the manufacture of pieces; and that the cost of such re-dressing and re-warping was £18 14s.; and these two sums of £226 8s. and £18 14s. ought to be allowed to the defendants as damages resulting from the plaintiffs' breach of contract, within the rule laid down in Hadley v. Baxendale (23 L. J., N. S., 179, Ex.). There was a further claim made by the defendants of £11 4s. 11d. for loss upon the sale of forty pieces, which were made from warps that had to be re-dressed and re-made; but, by arrangement between the parties at the hearing, this claim was abandoned. Before action brought the plaintiffs had claimed to be paid for warps to the weight of 403lb. 13oz., at 10s. 9d., amounting to £206 4s., less discount. The defendants disputed this claim, and insisted that they were liable only to the extent of 341lb. 3oz., and this weight the plaintiffs by their particulars in the action adopt. Before action brought the defendants made out an account based upon the weight of 341lb. 13oz., as the only weight for which they were liable, and claiming various deductions, including the two sums of £226 8s. and £18 14s., and thereby reducing the balance owing by them to £118 18s. 6d., which sum they remitted to the plaintiffs by a banker's draft, payable on demand, in settlement of the account. The plaintiffs kept the draft and treated it as a payment on account; and by the particulars in the action they give the defendants credit for all the sums claimed by them as allowance, except the sums of £18 14s. and £226 8s., and these two sums make together the sum of £245 2s., for which this action is brought. The result therefore is, that as the sums recovered by the defendants on the set-off and counterclaim are equal to the sum sought to be recovered in the action, judgment will be entered in the action and counter claim for the defendants, the amount sought to be recovered in the action being satisfied by the amount recovered upon the set-off and counter claim. If it be necessary for me to give any direction as to costs, I direct that the costs of the action and of the counter claim be paid by the plaintiffs, on the ground that the sum of £118 18s. 6d. paid by the defendants and received by the plaintiffs before action brought was in reality all that was justly due from the one to the other. I may observe that, at the request of the defendants the case was ordered to be heard with assessors. They attended, but it appearing that the real questions between the parties depended upon questions of law and not upon any mercantile usage, their attendance was by consent dispensed with, and the case, on facts proved, was heard by me without their assistance.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

SUNDERLAND COUNTY COURT.

Wednesday, March 21.

(Before E. J. MEYNELL, Esq., Judge.)

Ex parte MOORE; Re COOK.

Order and disposition—Bankruptcy Act 1869, s. 15, subsect. 5, and s. 94.

THE evidence upon the hearing of this motion presented for consideration a somewhat novel but important feature of the Act. The trustee of the estate of Isaac Cook, a bankrupt, claimed to be entitled to certain household furniture and effects which were in the house at which the bankrupt resided at the time of the act of bankruptcy.

The respondent, Miss Cook, daughter of the bankrupt, disputed the title of the trustee, alleging that the furniture was her property, and was in her uncontrolled possession when the act of bankruptcy was committed.

Duncan, Shields, for the trustee.

R. Holmes for the respondent.

The facts are as follows: The bankrupt had lived some years in the house in which the furniture was; he dated business letters from thence. On his business cards was engraved the number of the house, and a small brass plate with the bankrupt's name was fixed to the house door. A statement made by Miss Cook upon examination before the registrar was put in, which described the purchase of the furniture by her.

Duncan contended that under the circumstances the furniture, &c., in the house at the commencement of the bankruptcy was in the possession, order, and disposition of the bankrupt, and consequently belonged to the trustee. He relied upon the 15th section of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, and upon the cases of Simmons v. Edwards (16 M. & W. 838), and Davis v. Vining (Fisher's Digest) decided upon that section.

Holmes opened the case for respondent. It was objected that the deponents to the affidavits in reply were not present for cross-examination, and that notice should have been given of the filing of such affidavits, but

His HONOUR ruled against both objections.

From the evidence for the respondent it appeared that in 1870, when her father's affairs were in liquidation, the respondent purchased the furniture from Mr. Wilson, timber merchant, who was the trustee of the estate, and paid for it out of her own private means. She had been in possession ever since that time, and had at various times made additions. The house was taken by her, and she paid the rent, though the rates were paid by the bankrupt.

Holmes, referring to the notice of motion, stated that the trustee claimed the furniture as being "the property of the bankrupt," but as the trustee appeared to rest his claim more upon the reputed ownership clause, sect. 15, above referred to, he would meet him on that ground. Reading this section, he said the words are "goods and chattels being in the possession, order, or disposition of the bankrupt, by the consent of the true owner, of which goods and chattels the bankrupt is reputed owner," and if the furniture was not in the possession, order, or disposition of the bankrupt, the reputed ownership clause could not apply, which, he submitted, was not, and never had been, the case, the respondent always had the sole possession, order, and disposition. Reference was made to sect. 94, and cases in support of this view: (Ex parte Littledale, 6 De G. M. & G. 714, 734; Ex parte Dorman, re Lake, L. Rep. 8 Ch. App. 51, a case of joint possession, where it was ruled the order and disposition clause only applied where the bankrupt was in exclusive possession). It was further pointed out that in cases between the trustees of a married woman and the execution creditor of the husband the former were entitled as well to additions and renewals as to the original subject of the settlement: (Duncan v. Cashin, 33 L. Rep. 497).

His HONOUR, at the conclusion of Mr. Duncan's reply, intimated that he would take time to consider the question, which was novel, and gave leave to cross-examine Miss Cook if the trustee thought proper.

At a subsequent court she was cross-examined, but her evidence was so confused and conflicting, and she evidently knew so little about the facts, that the motion was further adjourned for additional evidence. Accordingly, on the 21st ult., Mr. Wilson, the trustee, and Mr. Middlemis, the receiver in the liquidation in 1870, gave evidence as to the purchase of the furniture by Miss Cook and Mr. T. L. Howarth, who had assisted her to carry the purchase through was called.

At the conclusion His HONOUR made an order that all furniture purchased by respondent from the trustee, Mr. Wilson, belonged to her, and that any other articles were to be given up to the trustee in the present bankruptcy, at the same time intimating that he did not know of any case at all like it. The parties to bear their own costs.

Duncan has since entered an appeal.

PETERBOROUGH COUNTY COURT.

Tuesday, Jan. 23.

(Before E. BEALES, Esq., Judge.)

TAYLOR v. THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Bankruptcy—Contract of sale—Stoppage in transitu—Right of trustee.

After for the plaintiff.

G. Gaches for the defendants.

The claim was £40, for wrongfully detaining and depriving plaintiff of certain timber his property by virtue of his trusteeship.

The facts of the case are as follows: In Sept. 1875, Walker was in treaty with Messrs. Rayner, of Liverpool, for the purchase of some timber, which, however, not arriving at Peterborough at such a time as the plaintiff expected, he refused it when it did arrive. In consequence of that Mr.

liquidation was entitled to the goods comprised in the bill of sale: (Ex parte Attwater, re Turner, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 682.)

A trader, with a bona fide intention of obtaining the means of continuing his business, assigned, by bill of sale, all his property (except his book debts amounting to £680, and an equity of redemption valued at £100) to a creditor to secure a past debt of £287 due upon a balance of account for goods supplied by the creditor, and to secure payment of a further supply of goods to a limited amount, which the creditor agreed to give the trader on credit. At the time of giving the bill the trader was insolvent, but this was not known to the creditor, who continued to supply him with goods upon credit until the sum owing to him amounted to £600, when he took possession under the bill of sale. Shortly afterwards the trader was adjudicated bankrupt, the alleged act of bankruptcy being the execution of the bill of sale.

Held (affirming the decision of the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy), that the bill of sale was not a fraudulent preference nor an act of bankruptcy, and that the trustee in the bankruptcy was not entitled to the property comprised in it: (Ex parte Sheen, re Winstanley, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 48.)

A document may be within the Bills of Sale Act 1854, so as to require registration, although made in pursuance of a previous verbal arrangement, if it contains all the terms agreed on, and would of itself pass the property in the goods to which it refers: (Brantom v. Griffiths, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 871.)

COMPOSITION.

The power given by the 126th section of the Bankruptcy Act 1869 enabling the majority of the creditors to compel the minority to accept a composition in satisfaction of their debts, must be exercised bona fide for the benefit of the creditors, and not from mere motives of kindness to the debtor. If the facts necessarily lead to the inference that the majority of the creditors were actuated by motives of kindness to the debtor, as where they passed a resolution to accept a composition of 1s. in the pound, though the debtor's own estimate of his assets showed enough to pay 5s. in the pound, the resolution cannot bind the minority and will not be registered: (Ex parte Page, re Page, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 638.)

A judgment creditor delivered a writ of fi. fa. to the sheriff before the judgment debtor had filed a liquidation petition. The creditors duly passed resolutions accepting a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound. The judgment creditor proved for the whole amount of his judgment debt, and voted in favour of the composition. After the registration of the resolutions the sheriff seized under the writ.

Held, that the judgment creditor not having seized before the composition was accepted had no security upon the debtor's property, and could not enforce the writ after the resolutions were registered.

Held also that the judgment creditor having proved as an unsecured creditor could not afterwards that he had a security: (Ex parte Balbirnie, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 857.)

A debtor, in his statement of affairs, entered A. as a creditor fully secured. The creditors duly passed and confirmed a resolution to accept a composition of 10s. in the pound. A. did not attend at either of the meetings of the creditors. The debtor paid the composition to all the creditors except A. Two years afterwards the debtor filed a second petition, whereupon A. realised his security and claimed to prove, under the first petition, for a balance which remained due after realisation of the security: Held (affirming the decision of the Chief Judge), that A. was not in any way bound by the debtor's estimate of the value of the security, and that he was entitled to prove for the balance and to receive the composition thereon: (Ex parte Bestwick, re Bestwick, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 784.)

A debtor filed a liquidation petition, and in his statement of affairs entered the name of a creditor who had brought an action against him in which a reference was pending, and the amount of his claim. The creditor tendered a proof for part of this amount, but the proof was objected to, and he was not allowed to vote at either of the meetings of creditors. The rest of the creditors duly resolved to accept a composition of 5s. in the pound. The plaintiff in the action received notice to appear before the registrar and prove his debt, but he did not do so, and the registrar ordered the objections to the proof to stand over till the arbitrator had made his award. The arbitrator awarded a portion of the amount claimed, and no tender of the composition having been made to him, the plaintiff commenced an action against the debtor on the award. On an application by the trustee under the composition to the Court of Bankruptcy to restrain the action: Held, that there was no ground for restraining the plaintiff from suing the debtor at law: (Ex parte Watson, re Watson, ib. 778.)

A judgment creditor delivered a writ of fi. fa. to the sheriff before the judgment debtor filed a liquidation petition. The creditors duly passed resolutions accepting a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound. The judgment creditor proved for the whole amount of his judgment debt, and voted in favour of the composition. After the registration of the resolutions the sheriff seized under the writ. Held (affirming the decision of Bacon, C.J.), that the judgment creditor not having seized before the composition was accepted, had no security upon the debtor's property, and could not enforce the writ after the resolutions were registered: (Ex parte Jameson, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 583.)

Where the creditors of a liquidating debtor whose statement of affairs showed a large amount of debts and virtually no assets, passed a resolution to accept a composition of 1s. in the pound to be paid within one month from the date of the registration of the resolution, no security being given for such payment, it was held that the facts led necessarily to the inference that the resolutions had been passed, not bona fide for the benefit of the creditors, but from mere motives of kindness to the debtor, and that, therefore, the registrar was right in refusing, at the instance of a dissentient creditor, to register the resolutions: (Ex parte Terrell, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 646.)

The composition creditors of a bankrupt passed a resolution under sect. 28 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869 that a composition of 9s. 6d. in the pound should be paid to all creditors but three; that the bankruptcy should be annulled, and that the three excepted creditors should not prove or make any claim upon the bankrupt for three years from the date of the annulling of the adjudication. This arrangement having been agreed to by the excepted creditors and approved by the court, the adjudication was annulled in April 1871, the composition was duly paid. The bankrupt received back his property and again commenced business, contracted new debts, and in 1875 filed a liquidation petition. B., one of the excepted creditors, proved under the liquidation for the whole amount of his debt. The County Court judge having held that B., although entitled to prove, was not entitled to receive any dividend until all the creditors subsequently to the bankruptcy had been paid in full:

Held, on appeal, that B., not having been guilty of any fraud or laches, was entitled to receive dividends upon proof of his debt, pari passu with the other creditors: (Ex parte Russell, re Winn, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 295.)

A. gave to B. three bills of exchange for the balance due upon an account of goods sold and delivered to him by B. By the course of dealing between them A. was entitled to a discount of 20 per cent. off the invoice price upon all cash payments made by him within one month from the first of the month following the delivery of the goods. In accordance with this arrangement the bills were treated as a cash payment, and were given for the balance of the account less the discount. Shortly afterwards A. went into liquidation, and his creditors accepted a composition of 10s. in the pound. B., on the assumption that the bills would be discontinued at maturity, which happened under the composition for the full amount of the balance due to him upon the account, and his proof was admitted at the first meeting of the creditors without objection and filed. A. subsequently refused to pay B. the composition upon more than the amount for which the dishonoured bills had been given. Held, that as the bills had been dishonoured B. was entitled to receive the composition upon the whole balance due to him on the account: (Ex parte Worthington, re Cumberland, ib. 951.)

The creditors of a liquidating debtor agreed to accept a composition payable by instalments. The amount required for the payment of the second instalment was received by the debtor's solicitor, who issued a circular to the creditors, stating that he would be prepared to pay the instalment on a certain date, the solicitors afterwards having claimed a lien upon the money for payment of his costs, charges, and expenses. Held, that he had constituted himself a trustee for the creditors, and could claim no lien upon the funds: (Ex parte Newland, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 916.)

LEGAL NEWS.

COLLUSION IN DIVORCE SUITS.—A parliamentary return issued to-day shows that the number of cases in which the Queen's Proctor intervened in divorce suits in 1876 was twelve; in five cases the intervention was successful, and seven cases are still pending.

VISIT OF THE CHINESE AMBASSADOR TO THE COURT OF APPEAL.—The Chinese Ambassador, with a portion of his suite and an interpreter, visited the Court of Appeal at Lincoln's-inn on Thursday. The judges (the Master of the Rolls and Lords Justices James and Baggallay) shook hands with the ambassador and his attendants, who were invited to take seats upon the bench, where they remained for some time while a trade mark appeal was being heard.

THE will of Mr. H. T. J. Macnamara, one of her Majesty's Railway Commissioners, late of 34, Linden-gardens, Kensington, who died on the 2nd of February last, was proved on the 11th inst. by Mr. W. H. Macnamara, the son, the executor, the personal estate being sworn under £16,000. The testator gives legacies and annuities to several of his relatives, and subject thereto the provisions of the will are in favour of his wife and children.

A MEETING of the Judicature Acts (Legal Offices) Committee was held at 13, Delahay-street, on Monday. There were present the Master of the Rolls (chairman), Mr. Justice Lush, Mr. F. Herschell, Q.C., M.P., Mr. W. Law, C.B., Mr. H. L. Pemberton (solicitor), Mr. E. F. Burton (solicitor), and the Hon. H. Cuffe (secretary).

THE following gentlemen received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Edinburgh on the 21st inst.: Charles N. Aitchison, Esq., Chief Secretary of the Foreign Department of the Government of India; M. Gustave Rolin-Jacquemyns, of Belgium, principal editor of the Revue de Droit International et de Legislation Comparée, and member of the Institut de Droit International; George Gore, Esq., F.R.S., of King Edward's School, Birmingham; John Bennet Lawes, Esq., F.R.S., of Rothamstead; Dr. Roost, an eminent Sanskrit scholar, and principal librarian at the India Office; and John Westlake, Esq., Q.C., author of a treatise on Private International Law, and member of the Institut de Droit International. We are glad to see that the English Bar has a representative amongst their list, in the person of an eminent Queen's Counsel, who is distinguished by his knowledge of the laws of other countries besides his own. The association of Mr. Westlake, Q.C., and M. Rolin-Jacquemyns, with the University of Edinburgh, is an honour alike to those gentlemen and to the University itself. The other degrees conferred are more strictly honorary in their character.

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE PROFESSION.

NOTE.—This Department of the LAW TIMES being open to free discussion on all professional topics, the Editors do not hold themselves responsible for any opinions or statements contained in it.

DAILY CAUSE LISTS AT WESTMINSTER AND CITY SOLICITORS.—Knowing that your columns are ever open to suggestions that are likely to benefit the profession, I beg to draw attention to the present system of announcing the trials at Common Law for the succeeding day, viz., publishing the list at the Association in Chancery-lane, which obliges city solicitors sending all the way down there every night when it is at all likely their case may be in the paper—very often for a fortnight. Would it not be very easy, and at no expense, to also publish a list at some place in the city—say the Guildhall—which would greatly facilitate that rather tedious task of searching the list?

MANAGING CLERK.

APPEARANCE—ENTERING SAME—STAMPS IMPRESSED OR ADHESIVE.—In reply to the observations in your impression of the 14th inst., I beg to draw your attention, and that of the legal profession, to sect. 26 of the Judicature Act 1875, whereby it is enacted that the fees and percentages of the courts shall, except so far as they may be otherwise directed, be taken by stamps, to be impressed or adhesive as the Treasury direct. The Treasury, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor, by an Order dated 22nd May, 1876, directed (amongst others) that "the fee payable on entering an appearance is to be denoted by an impressed stamp on the form of memorandum prescribed by the Appendix to the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1875; and, where the appearance of more than one person is entered by the same memorandum, the fees for all persons beyond the first to be denoted by means of impressed or adhesive stamps." It therefore appears the officials of the Common Pleas Division are acting in conformity with that rule, and that it is necessary for solicitors to get the impressed stamp upon all forms they have printed. H.

BAR EXAMINATIONS AND THE COST OF LEGAL EDUCATION.—Complaints continue to be made of the growing stiffness of these examinations, and the Lord Chancellor is now being quoted as in favour of a less stringent test. It is not only that a student's call is often postponed, and has become uncertain altogether, but the present system has added considerably to the cost of a legal education to students, on the one hand, while it reduces the receipts of the societies on the other. Students have still to pay the same fees and dues to the societies, and in addition a sum of not less than 100 guineas to private tutors to "cram" for the examinations; and as all they get in return for this outlay only enables them to pass, most men who intend following the Profession still go to a Stock, making a total of £32,957 Stock, producing annual dividends amounting to £1286 19s. 10d.

A balance of £583 11s. 9d. remained to the credit of the association with the Union Bank of London, at the date of the account, 28th Feb. last; and a sum of £15 was in the secretary's hands.

The board deeply regret having to record the decease, during the half year, of one of their esteemed colleagues, a trustee of the association, Mr. Park Nelson, of London; in whose place, as a director, they have elected Mr. Clement Uvedale Price, of Bedford-row, London; and, in conformity with the rules, a new trustee will be proposed for election at the ensuing autumn general meeting of the association.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report and statement of accounts, observed that there was no topic in the history of the association during the past half year which seemed to him to call for his particular notice. It was satisfactory, however, to know that their rate of progress as they advanced in age had not decreased, for they admitted as many members during the past half year as during the whole of the previous year. The amount of relief granted had also increased, and it would have afforded the board pleasure to have gone further in the same direction, but they thought it wiser to unite economy with their liberality. They had, always given precedence to the claims of their own members and their families, after whom the applications from the secondary class of non-members and their families were attended to. He regretted the loss which the board, in common with the Profession at large, had suffered in the loss of their respected colleague, the late Mr. Park Nelson, in whose place, as a director, the board had elected a gentleman who was present, and of whom he thought the members generally would approve. The name of another gentleman would be submitted in October for the office of trustee. The chairman alluded also to a proposition which had been made to the board by a member of the association, Mr. John Mackrell, of London, to found a system of "exhibitions" for the purpose of enabling solicitors of limited means to place their children for education at schools of their own selection. The details of the scheme were not yet fully before them, and therefore it was not mentioned in the report; but the board had arranged to discuss the subject with the gentleman who proposed it to them, after which they would consider whether it is expedient for this association to enter upon such a scheme.

Mr. J. W. Proudfoot (of London) said that he had no fault to find with the present report, except with regard to the amounts paid away in relief of non-members, but he objected to the resolution passed at the last general meeting at Oxford, which extended the powers of the board in respect of that relief. The association had been established for a specific purpose, but the resolution had absolutely abrogated that purpose, and he contended that there was no power to do this. He thought also that the matter ought to have been brought forward in London, instead of in an out of the way place such as Oxford, which was difficult to get at, and where the association had only six members. He did not want to stop the flow of charity, but he would ask them to look after themselves, and if they wished to give relief to non-members, who did not contribute to the support of the association, let them have a separate society, to which he would willingly contribute a donation. Although he could not move any resolution at the present moment, not having given the requisite notice, they had his ideas upon the subject, and he would see, at the proper time, what he could do.

Mr. J. S. Torr (of London) explained that the board always dealt with the applications of non-members and their families after the members and their families had been relieved, and never until then. The reason why so large an amount of money appeared to have been given to non-members and their families was simply because the former were very much more numerous; and if they had now a protest from Mr. Proudfoot against giving too much to non-members and their families, they had previously had complaints from other members that the objects of the association were restricted too much to members and their families, and asking that it should have more the character of a benevolent institution given to it.

Mr. Richard Wall Wall (of London) thought that, as the applications of members and their families were dealt with first, it could not be said that they diverted the objects of the association in giving some relief to non-members and their families.

Mr. Stephen Williams (of London) observed that the association was always intended to partake of a charitable character, and they were bound by the resolution passed at Oxford until it was rescinded.

After some further discussion the matter dropped, and the adoption of the report and statement of account having been agreed to, and the usual votes of thanks unanimously passed, the meeting separated.

LEGAL OBITUARY.

NOTE.—This department of the LAW TIMES, is contributed by EDWARD WALFORD, M.A., and late scholar of Balliol College, Oxford, and Fellow of the Genealogical and Historical Society of Great Britain; and, as it is desired to make it as perfect a record as possible, the families and friends of deceased members of the Profession will oblige by forwarding to the LAW TIMES Office any dates and materials required for a biographical notice.

J. H. HOLLWAY, ESQ.

THE late John Hardwick Hollway, Esq., solicitor, who died on the 6th inst., at his residence, Kenwick House, Louth, Lincolnshire, in the eighty-first year of his age, was the eldest son of the late John Palmer Hollway, Esq., of Boston, Lincolnshire, and was born in the year 1796. He was admitted a solicitor in Easter Term 1818, and practised for many years at Boston, and also at Spilsby, in Lincolnshire, in partnership with Mr. Henry Harwood. For near half a century Mr. Hollway held the office of Clerk of the Peace for the Parts of Lindsey, in the county of Lincoln. He married, in 1822, Barbara, third daughter of George Kilgour, Esq., of Balcarran, Aberdeenshire, and by her, who died in 1872, he has left a family. His eldest son, Mr. James Hollway, of Stanhoe Grange, is a deputy-lieutenant for the county of Norfolk; he was born in 1830, and has been twice married, first to Marietta, only child of John Calthrop, Esq., of Stanhoe Hall, and, secondly, to Ida, youngest daughter of the late Henry Fynes-Clinton, Esq., of Welwyn, Herts.

J. M. SHUGAR, ESQ.

THE late John Merritt Shugar, Esq., solicitor, of Tring, Hertfordshire, who died recently at his residence in that town, was a son of the late John Sutton Shugar, solicitor, of Portsmouth, and formerly mayor of that borough. He was born about the year 1820, and was admitted a solicitor in Michaelmas Term 1844, and was formerly in business in his native town. He had, however, practised at Tring for upwards of twenty years, and had won the esteem and regard of not only all his fellow townsmen, but of the surrounding neighbourhood, for ability and integrity. Mr. Shugar, who enjoyed a large professional practice, was a Commissioner to Administer Oaths, a Commissioner for taking Affidavits, a Perpetual Commissioner, and had also been for some time clerk to the borough justices. The remains of the deceased gentleman were interred in the churchyard at Tring, his funeral being attended by a large number of friends.

SIR T. TILSON.

THE late Sir Thomas Tilson, formerly a solicitor in London, who died on the 9th inst., at his residence, South Road House, Clapham-park, Surrey, in the seventy-fourth year of his age, was the eldest son of the late Thomas Tilson, Esq., of Brixton-hill, Surrey, by his marriage with Maria Matilda, daughter of Frelove Johnson, Esq. He was born in London in the year 1808, and was educated at Merchant Taylors' School. Having chosen the law as a profession, he was admitted a solicitor in due course, and was for some time head of the firm of Messrs. Tilson, Squance, Clarke, and Morice, of Coleman-street, City, solicitors to the London Joint Stock Bank, to Sion College, to the Phoenix Gas-light and Coke Company, to the Llynvi Iron and Lead Company, to the Llynvi Valley and South Wales Junction Railway, and to the English Copper Company. He had been for many years a magistrate and deputy Lieutenant for Surrey, and was Deputy Chairman of Quarter Sessions for that county from 1858 to 1867, when he became Chairman; he, however, resigned the chairmanship in 1870. He was also Chairman of Commissioners of Land and Assessed Taxes for Lambeth, and in 1870 he was elected a member of the London School Board (Lambeth Division). He received the honour of Knighthood in 1868. Sir Thomas Tilson married in 1827, Maria, daughter of William Shadbolt, Esq., of Stockwell, Surrey.

P. NORTHALL-LAURIE, ESQ., D.C.L.

THE late Peter Northall-Laurie, Esq., D.C.L., barrister-at-law, of Pax Hill Park, near Lindfield, Sussex, who died on the 21st inst., at his residence in Park-crescent, Regent's Park, in the sixty-ninth year of his age, was the last surviving son of the late Alexander Laurie, Esq., of Langridge Maine, Roxburghshire, and was born in the year 1808. He was educated at St. Peter's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1830. He was called to the Bar by the honourable society of Lincoln's-inn in Michaelmas Term, 1833, and went the Home Circuit; he also practised for many years as counsel in the Lord Mayor's and Sheriffs' Court, and at the City of London Sessions. He was a magistrate, deputy lieutenant for Middlesex, magistrate for Sussex and Westminster, and a commissioner of Lieutenancy for London. He assumed the traditional name of Northall, by royal licence, in compliance with a request contained in the will of Miss Catherine Jack, of Sloane-street, Chelsea. The deceased gentleman, who was created D.C.L. of Cambridge in 1872, married, in 1834, Frances, daughter of Henry Hulbert, Esq., of Great Somerford Manor, Wilts, by whom he left a family. His eldest son, Mr. Reginald Northall-Laurie, who now inherits Pax Hill Park, is a magistrate for Middlesex, and a commissioner of Lieutenancy for the City of London.

E. REYNOLDS, ESQ.

THE late Edward Reynolds, Esq., barrister-at-law, who died on the 14th inst., at Lahore, India, in the thirty-fifth year of his age, was the third surviving son of George W. M. Reynolds, Esq., of Woburn-square, and was born in the year 1842. He was educated at Lincoln College, Oxford, where he took his Bachelor's Degree in due course, and he was called to the Bar by the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple in Hilary Term, 1864, and had practised at Lahore for the last ten years.

J. CROWDY, ESQ.

THE late James Crowdy, Esq., solicitor, of Serjeants'-inn, Fleet-street, who died on the 24th ult., at his residence in York-terrace, Regent's Park, after a long and painful illness, in the fifty-seventh year of his age, was born in 1820, and admitted a solicitor in Easter term 1841, and was formerly for some years a member of the firm of Messrs. Lawrence, Crowdy, and Bowlby, of Old Fish-street, Doctors'-commons. About twenty years ago Mr. Crowdy, on the dissolution of the above firm, removed to Serjeants'-inn, where he soon acquired a fair share of business, and he had for some years acted as solicitor to the proprietors of the Times newspaper. In 1874 his son, Mr. James Crowdy, having been admitted into the Profession, joined him in partnership; according to the Law List he is a Commissioner for Recording Debts, Records, Oaths, &c., for the State of Pennsylvania.

B. SHAW, ESQ.

THE late Benjamin Shaw, Esq., barrister-at-law, of Tanfield-court, Temple, who died recently at a comparatively early age, was educated at King's College, Cambridge, where he was successively Scholar and Fellow, and took his Bachelor's degree in 1842 as Chancellor's Medallist. He was called to the Bar by the Honourable Society of Lincoln's Inn in Michaelmas Term 1868. He was for many years held back by conscientious scruples for making the declarations required by barristers at their call, and hence he had scarcely time during the few years of his practice to establish for himself the position to which he might rightfully have aspired. His opinions, however, observes the Guardian, "especially on ecclesiastical subjects, were exclusively sought, and carried great weight." He was junior counsel in the prosecution in the Ridsdale case. Mr. Shaw was well known also out of his professional active and zealous churchman of Evangelical sentiments, and as a hard worker in the cause of education and sanitary social improvements. He served upon the Sanitary Commission, and took an active part in promoting all sensible and judicious movements of the homes, health, and food of the working classes. He was an accomplished Biblical scholar, and a contributor to Smith's "Dictionaries of the Bible," &c., &c., and delivered some thoughtful and able lectures before the Christian Evidence Societies. He took an active part in the Church Conferences held at the Burlington Schoolrooms, and it was mainly through his influence and agency, and it may be added by his large contributions, that the Ecclesiastical District of St. Jude at Kensal Green was lately formed.

M. SCOTT, ESQ.

THE late Montagu Scott, Esq., solicitor, of Gray's-inn-square, who died at his residence in Fulham, on the 14th inst., after a very short illness, in the fifty-sixth year of his age, was the eldest son of the late James Scott, Esq., M.D., of Woodhall, Lincolnshire, by Emma, daughter of B. Burrall, Esq., and he was born in London in the year 1822. Admitted a solicitor in Hilary Term 1845, he lived to enjoy the esteem of a large circle of clients and friends. He had for many years past taken a deep interest in Freemasonry, and in early life became a member of the Lodge of St. James (No. 765), where he passed through every grade, and was retained in the chair for several consecutive years. He was one of the founders of the Carnarvon Lodge. In 1873 he was presented with a handsome testimonial in recognition rices in raising funds for the aged Free-widows of Freemasons. Mr. Scott ried, and has left a family of seven

His remains were interred in Brompton in the presence of a large number of Freemasons and members of the 40th Rifle Volunteers, to which corps Mr.
some time belonged.

G. T. TOMLIN, ESQ.
George Taddy Tomlin, Esq., barrister-at-the Inner Temple, and of Combe House,
